FISH, FURS AND FEATHERS

The trout season on the lower Hood river will open next Saturday. The season on the upper forks will not open until June 1.

Warm weather has stimulated to action local disciples of Sir Isaac Walton, and Friday and Saturday an estimated 75 fishermen were scattered along the lower Hood river at favored holes angling for steelheads and salmon trout. Among them was G. C. Loughery, resident state game warden. Numbers of the anglers used large steelheads. Several fishermen lost portions of their tackle, on receiving strikes from large steelheads.

Resident Game Warden Loughery reports that a new run of steelheads and salmon trout started in Hood river last week. The fish, he says, are bright and fairly flash through the water when they strike. "The run is interesting anglers very much," says Mr. Loughery, "and a score of enthusiasts are on the stream daily. Many fishermen have caught big steelheads. One landed four big fish Thursday."

The E. A. Franz Company is doing its customary annual duty toward increasing the number of game birds on the big store last week transferred from the wilderness a fisherman's paradise and put it on display in one of the big show windows. No man who has ever experienced the pleasure of which Sir Isaac Walton philosophized over the Franz store without wishing he could himself avail immediately to some good trout stream.

The long inactive winter, according to officials of the local Humane Society, has resulted in many horses suffering from lack of shoeing. Animals being brought to blacksmiths, it is being necessary to pare away large portions of the horny growth.

Japanese orchardists are declared to be the worst offenders against their horses. Many white residents, however, according to Humane Society officials, seem ignorant of how to care for their horses' hoofs properly.

Municipal Judge Howe says spring has arrived. He has received complaints from backyard gardeners against the activities of neighbor's chickens.

"I do not know just what the reason is," says Judge Howe, "but the complaint that I have seen a little more insistent than usual is perhaps the chickens are a little hungrier after the long winter we have had. At least the garden owners are very active in urging the city marshal to go into the poultry business."

A city ordinance provides that stray chickens may be taken in charge by the city marshal. This officer, in case the owners of the poultry fail to pay certain fees for the release of the birds, is empowered to sell them.

"Cherchez le rat," say ex-service men of the city, paraphrasing the title of a recent motion picture show and putting in practice French jargon learned on overseas expeditions. Others declare that they have found the rat, but that they cannot locate him.

An odoriferous situation has arisen as result of a visitation of rats here. The rodents were swarmed in the business district lately. George Melillo has caught 48 in traps at the rear of the Keir drug store. Others apparently resorted to poisoning, and the carcasses of a dead rat lay on the street in a neighborhood where a gas attack in basements of business structures. The basement of the Glacier office received a share of the perfume. Some of the aforesaid ex-service men are offering the use of gas masks to searchers for the ruined rat.

Residents of Underwood and White Salmon orchard districts report that made at the first inter-class track meet have been broken and prospects for the mid-Columbia meet are brightening.

It was at first thought that the eating of nitrate of soda applied as fertilizer to orchards might have resulted fatally. The birds, however, are said to have died before the fertilizer was broadcast in fields. Dead birds have been sent both to the University of Washington and the Oregon Agricultural College for stomach analysis.

The robins have appeared in the neighboring district in unusually large numbers this season. Recently pedestrians traveling to the Hood River-White Salmon ferry landing report having seen a 10-acre field filled with the chattering redbreasts.

The ranch place of A. D. Moo is the habitat of a Damon dog and a Pythias cat. The friendship between the two animals, owned by William Watson, has attracted attention. The two devote most of their time to the hunt, but in some instances partnership existing between them denotes unusual animal intelligence. Their teamwork is proving disastrous for gophers and mice.

The dog, a small black and white fellow, is sometimes seen with the cat at his heels, sniffs through the alfalfa or clover cover crops until he finds a gopher's burrow. When he begins to dig the cat, also a black and white and displaying no pride of aristocratic antecedents, becomes active immediately, seeking an outlet of the burrow. Then that cat freezes beside the hole. Stopping occasionally to snort into and around the dog digs furiously, and pretty soon, simultaneously with one of these snorts, the cat is seen to pounce. Another gopher less is left in the Moe orchard. Sometimes the dog catches the gopher, the little animal fearful of the dog, sometimes underground hiding. Invariably the dog, when the slaughter is complete, will turn over the prey to the cat, and the latter, walking with a pride that brings smiles to those who watch, struts off toward the farmhouse to display the kill.

Philandering has certain costs. Payment, a delving into the experiences of men points out, is inexorable. The rule is true, too, for the lower animals. A certain Hood River dog, more or less distinguished in his social circle, recently took a pre-springtime fling. One of his costs, apparently was paid on the spot, for he returned to the home on a bearing a handily lacerated neck. It is likely that he won't hide and hair from his adversary. But circumstances subsequent to the duel proved more of a yoke. The feasting would become ill-smelling and rendered the usually welcome canine less more or less of a nuisance. In stead of customary pats and sneery good days, he was greeted with chuffs and hisses up for discussion and such action as the meeting shall think proper to take.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

(By Dorothy Frey)

The regular monthly meeting of the school board of School District No. 3 was held last Thursday night with all members present. Supt. Cannon reported that the district had been enlarged by the addition of all that territory lying east to Wasco county line. This will add approximately $100,000 of assessed valuation to the district.

After considerable discussion of the junior high school situation, it was unanimously decided not to submit a proposed bond issue at this time. Instead J. W. Crites, chairman of the board, and Supt. Cannon were instructed to investigate and submit plans for providing necessary room for next year.

The consideration of teachers was taken up but was not finished. It was decided to maintain the regular teachers' salary schedule for next year, but the schedule election of teachers will be finished at a called meeting soon.

Friday all schools will not be in session, because the day being Good Friday and Arbor Day, it was declared a holiday by the school board.

Because of the Easter vacation there will be no city teachers' meeting Saturday.

Principals Conkle and Kizer spent Saturday and Sunday in Portland.

Miss Charlotte Kinnaird was absent from school Monday because of illness.

Miss Ferroll Swallow and Miss Emma Schmeiderkamp have given up their apartments in Eugene street and are living in the home of Robert Miller on State street.

The Mascot staff has received its first shipment of cuts and expects the rest by the end of this week. About all the copy work will be finished within a few days and all the material will go to the printer next week. Among the several features in this year's Mascot will be a list of the high school graduates from 1906 to the present time. This Mascot staff expects to set a precedent in making the mascot pay for itself. Last year the student body had to pay a deficit of about $200 and the year before $400.

The senior class has received copies of the class play. The title is "And Home Came Ted." Miss Bertha Hunter will supervise its production, which they expect to have ready for Friday night, May 12.

The operetta, "The Gypsy Rover," which has been the center of attraction in school life for the past two months, was presented last Friday afternoon and evening at the Riialto theatre. Prudence Spright, John Carson, Paul Sletten, Betty Statton, Opal Walker, James Johnson and several others who took leading parts are to be complimented on the fine work and talent displayed. The dance of the fairies by the high school graduates was one of the attractive features. Special dances, songs and interesting conversations went to make "The Gypsy Rover" one of the high school's best. Another added attraction, which combined to make it a success was the music furnished by the high school orchestra. This is the first year, that students have played in the orchestra, and they deserve much credit for their excellent accomplishments. Such a success is chiefly due to Mrs. Henney's untiring efforts, combined with those of the students, to make this year's presentation better than any other.

Hood River high school will be represented at the Tri-State (Oregon, Washington, Idaho) athletic tournament at Columbia University, Portland, Saturday, June 17th. James Johnson, Harold Dixon, Paul Friday, John Carson and Roger Woodward. They will enter the half-mile relay, dashes and other events. Many of the records made at the first inter-class track meet have been broken and prospects for the mid-Columbia meet are brightening.

IGNORANCE OF OIL EDITOR ASTONISHES

A little slip in geography has brought the wrath of many down on the head of the editor of the Standard Oil Bulletin, a publication issued monthly by the Standard Oil Co. of California. The March number of the house organ is devoted almost exclusively to blossom weeks of Pacific coast fruit sections. A panoramic view of the Hood River valley is shown, but the state banner apple district is accredited to Salem.

Local boosters beheld the picture and they bubbled. C. C. Crew, secretary of the Commercial club, at once wrote a protest. G. W. Peffer, manager of the local branch of the oil company, who is also a loyal Hood River booster, too, is among those who were shocked at the ignorance of the house organ editor.

"The Hood River valley, with its many automobiles, its tractors, power spray rigs and trucks, uses more gasoline than any other rural section of the state," says Mr. Peffer. "It will never do for them to credit this distribution to Salem."
