THUNDER STORM HITS COMMUNITY THURSDAY

Accompanied by a violent electrical storm, rain in cloud burst proportions struck the brakes of the Columbia between here and Cascade Locks about 4 a. m. Thursday, according to Traffic Officer Murray, patrolling the highway at the early hour to check up trucks and motor buses. He says the clouds seemed to open and deluge the earth by the bucketful for a minute. At points, Mr. Murray declares the hard-surfacing was covered with a foot of water, ditches being inadequate to carry the flood. "The lightning display was brilliant," says the traffic officer, "and the huge drops falling in the illumination looked like a shower of diamonds."

The thunder storm touched the southwest part of the valley, and local folk were awoken by its cannonading. A general rain struck the orchard sections, interrupting apple picking for the day.

SWOPE DEVELOPS BEAUTIFUL DAHLIA

J. W. Swope, who makes a hobby of his flower gardens, has developed a new variety of dahlia this season, securing a sport from what is technically known as a bud variation. Mr. Swope has secured a plant that is loaded with huge blooms of a deep cerise that shade to a pure white in the center. Fanatics who have seen the new plant declare it one of the handsomest dahlias they have ever seen.

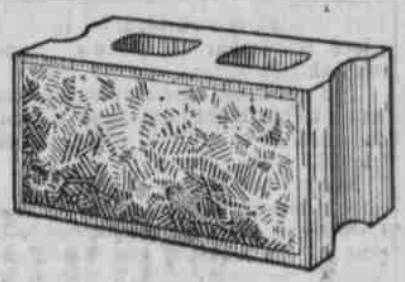

Because the local climate is so admirably adapted to dahlias, Mr. Swope plans next year on increasing his varieties to more than 100. He has a great assortment this year, but his varieties next season. It is said, will be the largest in the mid-Columbia.

PADDOCK ORCHARD PRODUCTION HEAVY

Orchardists who have viewed the nine-acre tract of G. C. Paddock, who resides in the East Barrett district, declare that it is the banner place of the valley this season. Mr. Paddock, who will finish his picking the coming week, will have according to estimates, 7,000 packed boxes from his 12 and 13 year old Newtown trees.

Kent Shoemaker, whose place is on the East Side, expects to pick 6,000 packed boxes from a 10-acre tract. His trees are chiefly Newtowns.

Election day, November 7, 1922, vote for S. W. Hepner, independent candidate for County Assessor. Equity and economy. A change in office is desired by many voters of Hood River County. (Paid adv.) n2

BROCCOLI SOUTHERN OREGON INDUSTRY

(By A. D. Moe)

Among the many pleasant and beautiful sections in Oregon is the Umpqua Valley, of which Roseburg is the metropolis. In attending the meeting of the Grand Commandery at that place we were royally entertained, and the next day were guests of R. H. C. Wood, formerly manager of the telephone exchange here, but who was transferred to Roseburg about 15 years ago. A couple of years later he was sent to The Dalles, but was so well pleased with Roseburg that he resigned the telephone job and returned there 12 years ago to enter business. Two years ago he bought an 80-acre ranch on the banks of the Umpqua, 10 miles from Roseburg, in the section known as Garden Valley. He has 50 acres in bearing orchard, and this year is picking about 8,000 boxes, mostly Spitzburgs and Newtowns. The orchard is in prime condition and he is well pleased with the prospects. In fact, he has disposed of his business and will move out to the ranch next year.

Mr. Wood has had considerable experience in the fruit business, having been manager for several years of a fruit association at Roseburg.

Roseburg probably grows a greater variety of crops commercially than any other section of Oregon. This year that section harvested 15,000,000 pounds of prunes. The apple crop will amount to about 210 cars, while walnuts and filberts are a good paying crop, and we look to Roseburg for our supply of turkeys for the holiday trade.

A new industry that is attracting a good deal of attention is the growing of a late winter variety of cauliflower called broccoli. Roseburg is the farthest north that broccoli can be successfully grown, and comes to market in the California product is gone. It takes an entire year to grow and mature the crop. The seed is planted in April, then transplanted a month later, the plants being placed about three feet apart. No irrigation is necessary, and no pests have to be fought. After cultivation during the summer months it attains its growth by the beginning of winter. It then lies partially dormant, until about February, when it starts to head, and is fully matured and harvested about March 1. It is packed in crates and sent to eastern markets in refrigerator cars, finding a ready sale at an average return of $1.50 per crate, f. o. b. Roseburg. The crop will average about 300 crates per acre. The net profit is $100 to $150 per acre. There are about 100 acres planted to this vegetable near Roseburg and about 300 acres in the county. It is estimated that there will be 200 cars shipped next year.

The distribution is being made very widely to create a market, until about February, when it starts to head, and is shipped to many different sections of the east, and it is expected that this crop will be one of the important of the many varied industries of Roseburg.

Garden Valley, now well developed around the farm, with a wide diversity of crops, not many years ago was practically waste land, or used as a range for stock. Land was worth but $10 an acre. The building of the Pacific Highway has done much to develop that section, and a system of paved market roads is now under way.

The Roseburg Valley has a rainfall similar to ours, with an elevation of around 500 feet. The climate is very good, without extreme heat in summer and seldom snowing in winter.

Dufur May Irrigate

According to Dufur orchardists who have been interested in the project the past week, a large irrigation project may revolutionize growing apples on the Dufur Orchard Company's large tracts in southern Wasco county. For the past two weeks, it was stated, a crew of engineers has been surveying the site for a prospective reservoir for use in watering the big orchard.

NOTES ON POTATO CERTIFICATION

(By Gordon G. Brown)

A few potato growers in the Upper Valley made a start this year in growing certified seed. Only one grower passed the preliminary field inspection. Naturally some of those whose fields failed to pass inspection feel somewhat disappointed and are inclined to think the growing of certified seed an impossible or impractical proposition.

As a matter of fact statistics recently compiled by the Extension Department of the Oregon Agricultural College, show that there is a rapidly growing interest in this state in seed certification. This year 16 counties are represented in this work. Umatilla and Deschutes have the largest acreage. In the Weston mountain district of Umatilla county, every grower entered his fields for certification, and practically all of them passed the first field inspection, and in Umatilla county as a whole, 553 acres passed, while 315 acres were rejected. In Deschutes county, 220 acres passed the first inspection, while only 210 acres were rejected. This information has just been taken from the Extension Service News.

The most notable feature of the situation lies in the fact that during earlier years of certification effort, it was common for the greater acreage to be rejected.

The writer submits that it is well worth while for Hood River to continue its efforts to grow potatoes which will command a premium, in fact it will scarcely pay to do otherwise. The standard in perfection in potato growing in Oregon is rapidly being raised and only those who produce the best will command a premium. This year there is a pronounced surplus in this state. Despite this fact certified seed will probably sell for double that obtained for ordinary stock. When Prof. G. R. Hyslop, of the Extension Department, was here a short time ago to make inspections, he pointed out that ideal conditions for potato growing obtained in the Upper Valley, and urged the growers to make further efforts in seed certification.

Statistics compiled show 2,912 acres entered for certification this year with 1,263 having passed the first field inspection.
