Grange to Celebrate July 4th

A little more than two years ago the ground was broken at Rockford corners for the erection of a community hall. This was an ambitious undertaking for Park grange. The hall proposed was to be 40x50 feet with full concrete basement and hardwood main floor. The complete building, together with the land, represents an investment of approximately $10,000. This is now about 90 per cent complete and the total indebtedness is about $2,500.

WORKING CONDITION IN KITCHEN BAD

Nation-wide investigation discloses the fact that approximately 75 per cent of the kitchens of the country have poor or inadequate lighting as measured by the illumination industry which has been found to be a good investment from a purely dollars-and-cents standpoint.

W. H. Radamaker, lighting engineer of Harrison, N. J., explains the situation this way: "In scientific investigations the measure of light is what the eye 'feels' and it is no uncommon practice to bring the illumination in a factory as high as 20 to 30 foot candles. In the kitchen, however, the average light intensity is from one to three foot candles. By comparing this with the lighting in a properly illuminated factory we believe that there are many housekeepers whose work in the kitchen, the workshop of the nation, is made harder and more inconvenient than necessary."

"Right now we are trying to arrive at some estimate on the number of people who have to wear glasses through carelessness caused from lights which are left, unknowingly, too dim or have a reflector which does not spread out the light rays in the best possible way. We have found many kitchen lamps exposed from the ceiling drop cord without a shade. Doctors say that such a light is a constant menace to eyesight, good production and cheerful working conditions."

"We believe the rest of this investigation will bring to the housewives of America many happier hours in their kitchens—the work-shops of their homes, the backbone of the nation. Certainly the whole world of America should have as pleasant a place in which to work as the men in industry."

U. P. Magazine Interesting

A number of unusually interesting articles will be found in the February number of the Union Pacific magazine.

Henry B. Rankin, 87 years of age, now lives in the home of his son, a writer of his personal recollections of Abraham Lincoln, who was a young attorney at Petersburg when Rankin, as a boy of 10, was a messenger in the Lincoln court there.

"It is yet too early to expect an adequate biography of Lincoln. We are yet too near to him in time to get the true perspective; to trace the operation of the forces that shaped his development, or to compare him with the rest of earth's immortals. But some day, after all have passed away who knew Lincoln and staged of peculiar personalities and events, both simple and tragic, that formed his environment, some master historian will gather the partial and contradictory records left by our contemporaries, purge them of falsehood and caricature, and from the material remaining will write upon the unfolding pages of history, the true character story of Abraham Lincoln."

Charles E. Smith, an employee of the Associated Press at Colorado Springs, Colorado, has in his possession approximately 40,000 words of news matter each night. He operates the typewriter through the touch system and advises fellow operators to "carry" even though they may lose their sight.

A description of Colorado's giant gas well near Fort Collins, Colorado, is furnished by Agnes Wright Spring of Fort Collins. The well, which has produced a volume of gas estimated at $2,000,000 cubic feet, has now been capped. The Union Pacific is preparing to build an 18 mile extension to tap this field and agricultural communities.

Legion Notes

Veterans of the World war who constitute the American Legion of several counties will meet in various sections of Oregon next month when district conferences of Legion chapters will be held under direction of state officials of the American Legion. Seven district conferences are planned, calling on all of the 15 American Legion Posts in Oregon. A representative of the veterans Bureau will attend all conferences, according to Fred E. Kiddle, of Island City, Legion state commander, who declared that the conference of the Legion for the purpose of exchanging ideas between posts, discussion of Legion service, community work and problems affecting the disabled and post administration matters.

The American Legion has announced appointment of Geo. R. Wilbur as chairman of the child welfare program for the department of Oregon. Brazier C. Small, of Salem, was made chairman of the aeronautics committee. Mr. Wilbur is past-commander of the state organization and Mr. Small is lieutenant of Salem Post, American Legion.

Fifteen posts of the American Legion in Oregon have exceeded their 1923 membership standing. These are Bako, La Grande, Eugene, Salem, Roseburg, Astoria, Seaside, Imbler, Springfield, Madras, St. Helens, Mantoloking, Trineville and Cottage Grove. Membership throughout the state up to January 31, over a corresponding period for the previous year has little more than doubled and the largest post in the state shows an increase of more than 400 per cent over the same period for the previous year. State Legion officials are confident that the goal of 10,000 members for the department will be reached this year.

Flowers Are Blooming Everywhere

The February bluebells which Hood River is exploiting for the amusement of the rest of the state are now matched by West's baby-faced Maris Carrier Otto V. Purrell picked a number of these pretty blossoms Monday on Dry creek and brought them to town as an earnest token that if spring really here the floral kingdom will be badly fooled. He also saw other varieties of wild flowers in bloom. Tuesday both Weston carriers plucked some buttercups.—Weston Leader.

PORK SHOULD BE COOKED THOROUGHLY

(By Frederick D. Stricker, M. D., collaborating epidemiologist, Oregon State Board of Health, in cooperation with United States Public Health Service.)

Warning! It is dangerous to eat raw or underdone pork. Pork, ham, bacon and sausage may be infected with trichina.

Trichinosis or trichinosis is a specific infection with the thread worm, trichinella spiralis, and results from eating meat infected with the living encysted larvae of the parasite. The life history of the parasite occurs in three stages, the adult, the embryo, and the encysted larvae. The larvae are usually found in carnivorous and omnivorous animals such as rats and mice, dogs, cats, hogs and man. So far as infection in man is concerned the only animal of practical importance in the spread of the disease is the hog. The rat is of importance because hogs will consume dead rats.

When the encysted larvae enter the digestive tract of an animal capable of becoming the host of the worm, the digestive juices dissolve the capsule wall. The adult parasite develops from the larvae in two or three days and goes through the procreation process in the body of the host. The males die, while the females penetrate the intestinal-mucous membrane and lodge between the epithelium and connective tissue.

The embryos are discharged fully formed from the female about three days after impregnation and penetrate the lymphatic and are carried to the mesenteric node and thoracic duct, then to the general circulation, where they may wander into various regions as the lungs, heart, brain, and serous cavities. The majority reach the voluntary muscles; those which survive become encysted larvae if the host does not succumb to the infection. The main symptoms and signs of the disease are associated with the period of wandering and lodgement of the parasite.

The mortality from trichinosis in the United States is about half that for typhoid fever. There is a resemblance to typhoid fever with edema of eyelids and face, and muscular pain and tenderness.

In a disease of this nature prevention is much better than cure, for it is obvious that once the embryo are in the general circulation it is too late to prevent the disease. Persons should be educated regarding the danger of feeding the uncooked offal or rats. Pigeons should be as rat-proof as possible, so that pigs themselves cannot kill and eat rodents.

The public should be taught not to eat uncooked or under cooked pork or pork products.

FINN, FURS AND FEATHERS

The wood duck, unlike most other ducks, usually builds his nest far from his natural element, water. Sometimes it may be a mile or more from the nearest water course, but he has solved the difficulty of transportation by carrying the eggs on his back to a feeding ground in a truly remarkable way, says the Detroit News.

No sooner are the eggs hatched into ducklings, about the size of bumble bees, than each parent bird takes a little one in its bill, wriggles through the opening in the chestnut tree or white oak which harbors the nest, and with a quick glance lest some enemy may be near, flies swiftly overland to creek or water hole. Here the tiny burdens are dropped gently into the water.

Without previous swimming lessons these newly hatched chicks start over the surface of the water for the cover of marsh grass or lily pad, where they hide until the return of their parents with more of their brothers and sisters.

The lake region of Skamania county may become a noted duck hunting region. The lakes annually are visited by many flocks of wild fowl, but feed is scarce and they do not linger. The Skamania County Game Commission has just received from Wisconsin a shipment of wild rice seed, which will be planted in the lake area. It is proposed by the commission to close some of the lakes in order to establish a breeding preserve.
