COLUMBIA GORGE IS GUARDING SHRUBS

Crews of men have been engaged throughout the winter in landscaping the grounds of the Columbia Gorge hotel, carrying out plans that call for the preservation of native shrubbery and trees. The gardeners have given their greatest attention in restoring a rock fountain among the dwarf oak trees immediately in front of the hotel. Water has been piped to the center of the massive formation of native stones and earth, and a small stream cascades its way down from the center of the fountain. So deftly have the men worked that the fountain, although just completed, has the appearance of being a natural part of the grounds. Moss on the newly placed stone makes them look as though they had been there for ages.

Only does one suspect that the fountain is man made when he observes the freshly turned beds of earth, where soon the indigenous plants and shrubs will be grouped. Wild currant, Oregon grape and ferns found only in the Cascades will cover the bare spots. Lichens that are found only along the cliffs of the Columbia gorge will be planted among the rock crevices of the fountain.

Collaborating with Manager Tremblay Prof. L. F. Henderson has made a survey of the grounds of the Columbia Gorge hotel. He found 29 indigenous trees and shrubs growing on the comparatively small acreage. At the suggestion of Prof. Henderson Mr. Tremblay has neat signs painted for posting on various trees. The wooded part of the grounds will now form an arboretum that will be interesting to anyone who wishes to study Oregon botany. Prof. Henderson will make a selection of shrubs and plants for planting on the rock fountain. The grounds of the hotel have been improved otherwise to considerable extent. New, moss covered walls have been constructed along the banks of Phelps creek which winds its way obliquely across the front grounds. New nesting places have been placed along the edge of the basalt cliffs on which the hotel is perched nearly 150 feet above the water level of the Columbia. From these the guest or chance motor tourist may sit for hours and be inspired by the ever-changing views of the sweeping expanses of the great river.

The golf course, established last year, has been materially improved and tennis courts have been made available for those who desire them. Those who have inspected the new rock fountain and have seen how the management of the hotel is endeavoring to preserve and emphasize the indigenous trees, shrubs and plants, declare it a feature that will be one of the most alluring at the resort.

N. W. COMMISSION BEGINS TO FUNCTION

After an all-day session between members of the Northwest commission and representatives of growers' cooperatives from all over the Northwest, tentative plans for a Northwest central exchange were made. Temporary directors named and sub-exchange projects at Wenatchee, Yakima, Hood River, Walla Walla, Selah and Spokane last week. A tonnage of 8,550 cars was assured; as soon as 10,000 cars are assigned the agreements will become effective. Indications pointed to Yakima being picked as headquarters, although more details were to have been settled Monday in an adjourned session.

H. P. James, of Yakima, was named chairman of the tentative board of directors of the central exchange. Edwin Smith of Wenatchee, was retained as secretary. Other members were E. M. Gillette, of Malaga; C. K. Benton, of Hood River; a representative for the Spokane valley growers; J. W. Langdon, of Walla Walla; C. C. Frost, of Selah, and Lee H. Lamson, of Kanawick, White Bluffs and Hanaford. The Skookum Packers' Association, Wenatchee, the Wenatchee-Kenema cooperative and the Yakima Horticultural Union expressed approval of the plan but declined to pledge themselves to join without first consulting the stockholders. Articles of incorporation, drawn by the commission, were approved and sub-exchanges and the contracts between them and the central exchange were discussed.

Lost Lake Road Soon Open

The Lost Lake road is almost free of snow, according to Dr. W. Donald Nicklessen, of Portland, who with a party walked to within a half-mile of the highland body of water Sunday. Dr. Nicklessen reports that he and his friends drove their automobile to the rock crusher turn-out, within a mile and a half of the lake. "There," he says, "we were turned back by fallen trees. The winter storms felled many trees along the highway. As soon as crews have cleared the road, it will be possible to motor all the way to the lakeside."

OILED APPLE WRAPS PROVE THEIR WORTH

The use of oiled paper in wrapping apples has increased rapidly in this section in the past two years. It is estimated that at least a third of the commercial crop of the Northwest was wrapped this season. Wrapping is practiced extensively by several large associations and concerns which handle thousands of carloads of apples. Some cash buyers and growers' associations have packed apples of all grades and all varieties in oiled wraps.

By far the most important consideration leading to its increased use is that oiled paper has reduced, and, in most cases, entirely prevented the damage by scald in common or cold storage and in transit. Prevention of the serious loss from this trouble and the resultant advantages in marketing the crop have led to shipments of many carloads of oiled paper wraps to the Northwest this season. The additional cost of ordinary wrapping is only about two cents per box.

Romes, Staymans, Grimes, Newtowns and Winesaps are all subject to severe scald and these varieties were wrapped in oiled paper by most operators. While such varieties as Jonathans and Delicious do not usually scald badly, many of these also were put up in oiled wraps. In fact, it is the prediction of many shippers that wrapped apples moving from the Northwest will be in oiled paper wrap another year. In general, fancy and C-grade apples of red varieties tend to scald more than extra fancy, because these two lower grades are not so highly colored.

Some associations had enough oiled paper to wrap every box of apples shipped and they are advertising the fact that nothing but such wraps were used in packing their particular brand. Many packing houses are stamping the box with the words "oiled wrap" and others have these words printed on the individual papers. Eastern buyers are beginning to buy oiled-wrap apples in their orders and shippers are quoting this special pack. In May, 1923, oiled-wrap apples brought a $1 per box premium on the New York auction over similar apples in ordinary wraps.

Revive Your Old Trees!

SHATTERING the subsoil around the roots of old trees with dynamite allows the roots to spread farther and go deeper. You will get bigger and better yields from orchards rejuvenated with dynamite. Blasting the soil ensures better drainage and makes the soil more absorbent so it retains and stores moisture for sustaining the trees in times of drought. Root-bound trees, too, will be helped by breaking up the hardpan with dynamite. Pacific Stumping is the explosive to use.
