

The Hood River Gazette

VOL. XXXVI

HOOD RIVER, OREGON, THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1924

No. 1

TWENTY YEARS AGO

The First National Bank opened its doors—twenty years in which it has been a helpful, stimulating influence in this community.

Every year of contact with the farmers, business men and home life of Hood River has shown us new ways of improving our service.

Personal, individual attention to every call for service is the rule of this Bank—and the successful application of this rule is proved by the hosts of friends who today are numbered among our patrons.

To one and all we give sincere thanks for the hearty endorsement of our service indicated by their patronage.

1904 - 1924

The First National Bank

HOOD RIVER, OREGON

A NEW HOOD RIVER BOND ISSUE

We offer and recommend as a desirable investment the new 6½% bonds of the Farmers Irrigating Co.

The full issue is $60,000 and the bonds are secured by a First Mortgage on the entire property and holdings of the Farmers Irrigating Company.

The bonds are in denominations of $100 and $500 and are payable serially beginning June 1st, 1927, the last bonds maturing June 1st, 1941.

The present value of the property securing these bonds is more than $200,000 and the population served by this company is about 1500.

This is the oldest Irrigating System in Hood River Valley and it serves one of the best and most highly developed districts in the County.

Further information on application.

BUTLER BANKING COMPANY
Member Federal Reserve System

SCREENED COMFORT

ASK your neighbor who recently built a Screened Porch, what he thinks of it. This is about what he will say, "It's great; best place in the whole house. I never knew before what it was to Sleep Soundly and Really Rest"

Come in and we will help you plan one for your home. We not only handle all materials for Screened Porches, but also we manufacture Screen Doors and Screen Windows to fit your openings.

EMRY LUMBER & FUEL CO.

"Everything to Build Anything"

Tsungani

I have installed several sets of these wonderful pistons in the last three months, and their performance is wonderful. Drop in and let me tell you about them.

Shay's SERVICE Shop

AT THE FASHION GARAGE

Shop 1201

Res. 3721

HEALTH AND BEAUTY DEMONSTRATION

Care of the Face. Do Women Show Their Age? If so, Why? How to Remove Lines and Wrinkles. Should Women Use Cosmetics? These subjects and other interesting topics will be thoroughly discussed by Health Representative from New York on BELCANO.

A Free Lecture and Demonstration to be given at

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE CLUB ROOMS

FRIDAY, JUNE 6TH, AT 2 P. M.

Come and bring your Friends.

BELCANO Toilet Articles are carried by

KRESSE DRUG COMPANY

The Rexall Store

A Purchase Here Carries That Pleasure Of Satisfaction

eat Vegetables
for Vitamins

OUR NONPAREIL
GREEN
ASPARAGUS

is one of the best tonics, easy digestible and quick acting.

The Twentieth Century
Truck Farm

JOHN KOBERG, PROPRIETOR

BERRY PICKERS

Make the Grange Store your buying place while in the Valley.

We give best quality, best prices and real service.

We have real specials on groceries at all times.

GRANGE CO-OP. STORE

MILLER BATHING CAPS

A MILLER cap in every hue in the rainbow to match your bathing suit. A style and shape for every taste and purpose. Water Wings, Rubber Sponges, etc.

Take a MILLER Beach Ball with you.

HOOD RIVER DRUG CO.

MERCHANTS' LUNCH—FOUNTAIN SERVICE

Phone 1551

Ladies' Rest Room

"We are as near to you as your telephone."

BERRY FESTIVAL NEXT THURSDAY

UPPER VALLEY SCHEDULES EVENT

Men's Forum and Women's Auxiliary invite Valley—Pythian Band Will Play For Crowd

The Men's Forum of the Upper Valley United church and the Women's Auxiliary have set next Thursday evening as the date for the strawberry festival. A committee, composed of S. G. Gibson, E. C. Euwer and Geo. W. Riedgett, has been appointed to select a festival queen. The judges have announced that bobbed hair will not be an issue in selecting the queen.

The Knights of Pythias band will participate in the festival, which is anticipated, will draw a large delegation from this city.

The entire evening will be characterized by many unique entertainment features. Those in charge of the program are working out many novelties.

The entertainment will be staged in the grove adjacent to the grade school and the guests are assured that everything will be done to make the evening enjoyable. The committee wants it to be understood that though a nominal charge will be made for refreshments the desire of those sponsoring the event is to make the festival a social success rather than a financial gain. The proceeds will be used in aid of community work. The program, which is free to all, will commence at 8 p. m. and an invitation is extended to all sections of the county to participate.

1ST NATIONAL BANK TWENTY YEARS OLD

The First National bank celebrated its 20th birthday Monday. C. C. Crew observed the event by placing in the financial institutions' show window an exhibit that is creating as much interest as any display ever made here.

He secured a number of pictures of pioneer events. In the center of the display appears one of the first editions of the Hood River paper, published June 8, 1888, with Geo. T. Prather as publisher and J. H. Cradlebaugh as editor, carried the story of a great fire at Seattle and the tragedy of the Johnstown, Pa., flood. The Glacier, first week in celebration of its own birthday, will publish stories from the first issue, which was loaned to the bank by S. E. Blythe.

The collection of pictures arranged in the bank window by Mr. Crew includes classes at the high school, street schools. In the Barrett picture Kent Shoemaker, then a mere beginner at scholastic duties, is shown carrying a drum almost as large as himself.

A picture of the first organization, Guin-Guin, Robert Rand's pioneer resort, taken in the 80s, shows the styles of the day. In this picture appears Bert Stenham wearing a "dicer" hat that would win him his fortune, if apples were selling well, in a presentation at the Rialto theatre.

All first assembled in the living room of the Ehl home. Miss Ruth Garrett presented each of the couples with a handsome bouquet of roses, a presentation speech to each couple being made by Miss Ruth Oliver. After song by a quartet composed of Rev. Johnson, R. O. Cooper, E. J. Beck and Alfred Neal, the party repaired to the tables. A sumptuous luncheon was served. Rev. C. R. Delapine presented the gifts. After he had finished, Mrs. Neal called on various others in the assembled party for remarks.

Among those expressing keen regret at the departure of the couples were Sanford Smith and R. E. Steele.

WOMAN PLAYS SLICK CONFIDENCE GAME

Mrs. Pat Gallagher was the victim of a clever bunco game last week, when a woman, who gave the name of Mary G. Allen, appeared at her home, purporting to be in search of rooming accommodations. She selected the quarters and sought to make a deposit. However, she had no funds, and Mrs. Gallagher was unable to cash a check. She so manipulated her conversation as to request Mrs. Gallagher's signature on a piece of paper, in order, as she said, that she might make arrangements to pay her by check, if she chose.

The woman then visited the First National bank, seeking to cash a check for $45. When the request was made that she be identified, she said she knew no one, but finally she apparently recollected that she had the signature of Mrs. Gallagher, who she presented to the paying teller, who recognized it. The woman stated that she could secure Mrs. Gallagher's endorsement to the check, which she did, securing the cash from the bank. She felt, however, it appeared to take possession of her rooms, and Mrs. Gallagher grew suspicious. The bank finally began an investigation and discovered that the check, drawn on a Central, Wash., bank and signed by Geo. W. Allen, was worthless.

When city and county authorities were notified and began to check the case, the woman was discovered to have arrived in the city in an automobile of a certain description. Surrounding cities were immediately notified, and a car was halted at Arlington. A woman was returned from there, but she failed to fit the description. Sheriff Edick immediately sent circular descriptions of the Allen woman to all Northwest points.

MR. FURNISH DIES SUDDENLY TUESDAY

News Tuesday of the sudden death of William Jeffers Furnish came as a severe shock to his friends here. Mr. Furnish became interested in Hood River real estate some eight or nine years ago. He also purchased a block of stock in the First National Bank. He was a frequent visitor here.

Mr. Furnish was in his office alone Tuesday afternoon. He apparently had been working at his desk and had retired to his couch for a nap as was his habit. He had been dead only a few minutes when Max Leudermann, his real estate representative, stepped

W. O. W. PICNIC IS ON TODAY

CROWDS FROM MANY CITIES COMING

Merrymakers to Get Ton of Salmon—Street Parade Starts at 1 P. M. All Stores to Close

All plans have been completed for the big Woodmen of the World celebration and initiation today. The committee in charge has spared no time and expense to make this a great event, one that will long be remembered by the citizens of Hood River as well as many other cities in this state and the state of Washington. Visitors began arriving last evening and early this morning and from all indications the expected 5,000 will be here. The largest number of candidates from any of the 14 cities represented will be from Goldendale, Wash., which secured more than 75. Hood River being a close second. The program for the day will start with a big street parade, which will form at Thirteenth street and Cass street at 1 p. m. After parading the principal streets of the city, led by the local K. P. band, the visitors will return to the picnic grounds at the foot of Thirteenth street, where the afternoon will be given over to athletic events of all kinds. At 5 p. m. one ton of baked Columbia river salmon will be served free to all who attend.

At 8 p. m. 500 candidates will be initiated. There will be music and dancing all during the day and evening. The public is invited to attend.

STONE AIDS MOSIER IN REORGANIZING

A. W. Stone, who June 1 terminated his connection with the Apple Growers Association, immediately began the task of converting the Mosier Fruit-growers Association into an organization characterized by strictly cooperative lines. The Mosier association, which is one of the few sales concerns of the Northwest with which the growers of the district are affiliated 100 per cent, was formed on corporate lines that will not permit it to enjoy numerous exemptions that apply to agencies that are entirely cooperative.

Mr. Stone, who will devote his entire time hereafter to the interests of growers' cooperative institutions, spent yesterday at Mosier. He may, he says, later establish an office in Portland.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined. The plan has since been adopted by various growers' organizations.

Mr. Stone became the Association's first manager and served in this capacity until the end of the fiscal year in 1923. For the past year he was traffic manager. The Association started without a dollar. At the time he left it as manager it had a fund of $230,000, utilized in the purchase of supplies for members. It had amassed a building fund that reached $280,000. These properties were secured through assessments no higher than growers had paid to private shippers for services. The property, in case of dissolution of the sales agency will revert to the growers, a division being made on the basis of tonnage furnished the organization.

Before the Apple Growers Association was formed it had been customary for directors of cooperative associations to give personal endorsement to notes signed for funds needed in administration of the business. The system of contracts signed by affiliated growers of the Association, however, gave the management power to proceed with financing, and floating bond issues has always been carried out successfully. During the war period, when interest rates soared, the Association always procured funds at seven per cent interest.

Because of its strict cooperative organization, the Association has escaped state and federal income tax. Originally the federal department ruled that the Association would be liable for income tax. Mr. Stone made a trip to Washington and finally secured total exemption. If the tax had been applied the organization would have been seriously hampered.

Mr. Stone came to Hood River in 1908 seeking health. He purchased a large tract of property in the Valley. For 10 years he was engaged as an attorney in Buffalo, N. Y., where he effected the successful cooperative organization of independent oil concerns. He first became interested in cooperative efforts of apple growers in 1912, when, because of his experience in financial matters he undertook the re-organization of the old Hood River Apple Growers Union. His interest in the prime movers in the organization of the Apple Growers Association, which succeeded the Union and other fruit sales interests here. Mr. Stone prepared the by-laws and constitution of the sales agency, the first of its kind in the United States to incorporate a double system of voting, tonnage and membership franchise being combined