CITY PLANS PAVING FOR OAK STREET. The city council is making preparations to pave Oak street from Ninth to its intersection with Cascade avenue, which has been used as the city extension of the Columbia River highway. The paving will then be extended west for 1100 feet to the city limits, connecting up the highway. The improvement will make available two paved ways through town for highway traffic. It has been proposed that eastbound traffic use one of the streets, while that headed west use the other, thus making through traffic one way.

The city initiated plans for the paving last year, but it was abandoned because of technical errors in an ordinance and the prospect of litigation. It is proposed to improve the street by an 18-foot concrete pavement, leaving the sides surfaced with gravel.
