Irrigation Water Should Be Ready (By Leroy Childs)

Nearly every season one or two districts in the valley do not have their ditches in shape to supply water for the early sprays. This season, because of the prevalence of blisters, it is very important that growers be supplied with water before the buds open as the blisters cannot be controlled if the green shows on the buds. Various irrigation districts should be urged to have the canals in shape that growers may not suffer a loss through failure to control the blisters this spring.
