Clipped Here and There

The vice president of the National Council of the Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Association said: "All the farmer asks of congress is to be allowed to settle his own problems himself." This organization unanimously endorsed him.

Price fixing was an utter failure from the farmers' standpoint, as absurd as fixing a uniform leg or waist measure for farmers' pants. Political nostrums without count have been proposed for farm relief by self-appointed expert Moses without any real farm mandate; mostly they were more clever tricks for public notoriety or public jobs.

That does not say the farmer is not interested in good legislation; on the contrary, no one is more vitally affected. He needs better distribution, but so, too, do the people who must eat farm products. He needs to know more about the advantages of diversified farming. Also he needs to apply more business-like methods to many farm operations. He is learning all the time.

He is the greatest sportsman there is in any industry. Just give him a chance, let him alone without a lot of foolish volunteer yapping, and he will come through and feed the world.

—The Manufacturer.

In seven years, from 1915 to 1922 inclusive, defective chimneys and flues caused a loss of $104,263,226 in the United States. As an originator of fires, only matches and smoking have a greater record than chimneys and flues.

"Burglarding America Against Fire" shows by photographs the type of chimney in the average dwelling place which has caused this terrible loss. There is apparently no excuse for their existence other than the carelessness of the people who live in the houses where they are located.

These chimneys are shown to have open cracks between the bricks where the flames and sparks can come in contact with room walls. It makes one shudder to think of the thousands of helpless children, sick persons and cripples who are in houses where this lurking fire menace is ever-present.

Reflect for a moment that the great fire starters are matches, smoking and defective chimneys, and that control over them rests almost entirely with the individual. Losses caused by these agencies are almost wholly chargeable to the individual. Such a record of fire loss from these controllable causes is a terrific arraignment of the average American for his negligence toward life and property.

In France the fire-starter is liable for damage caused by his carelessness. The fire-loss record in the United States has more than doubled in the last 10 years. If it continues in the next 10 years, the annual destruction by fire will aggregate over a billion dollars in money and the death of 30,000 persons.

Unless we check our own carelessness the law may have to check it for us.—The Manufacturer.

The full significance of this is realized only when we visualize savings deposits as meaning much more than merely dollars in the bank. They really mean an increase in the accumulated productive capital of the country, since money deposited in the bank as savings is promptly applied by the bankers in the purchase of securities by which plant, railroad and other industrial development is made possible. These figures mean, therefore, that the small savings of many millions of people, instead of being frittered away in the purchase of goods that are immediately consumed, thus having a destruction of capital, are gathered together and applied in the better utilization of capital through the upbuilding of industrial equipment. This means the preservation and perpetuation of the country's physical wealth and its application to the production of further wealth, steadily and in larger volume, resulting in a higher standard of living for all classes in the country.

These tremendous savings figures indicate sound habits of thought and practice on the part of millions of people in their personal economic affairs. This is an asset of no small value in upbuilding our present and future outlook. It is, in fact, one of the most promising elements in the city today. It means that we not only have the resources for prosperity, but also enough common sense to make good use of them.

What is a Disease Carrier? (By Frederick D. Strickler, M. D., collaborating epidemiologist, Oregon State Board of Health, in cooperation with the United States Public Health Service.)

When a person is ill with diphtheria, typhoid fever, smallpox, pneumonia or any other infectious disease, instinctively we want to stay away from him so as not to catch the disease. Furthermore, it is the duty of the health authorities of the community in which you live to see that no one does go near such a case except the person taking care of the patient. But when the one who has had the infectious disease gets over his fever, feels like himself again, and is able to be about, he naturally reverts to his usual daily routine and misging with other people. Oftentimes, however, the germs causing certain diseases persist long after the illness itself is over. This is especially true of diphtheria and typhoid fever. When this occurs such a person is called a carrier of the disease. While no longer sick himself he is still capable of giving the disease to others.

Before the one who has had diphtheria may be released from quarantine, the rules and regulations of the Oregon State Board of Health require definite laboratory tests of the secretions from the nose and the throat. This rule oftentimes makes the person impatient, but it is necessary for the protection of other people.

Following typhoid fever, the germs of this disease may stay in the gall bladder, passing in numbers, and be discharged from time to time into the intestines. When this occurs the person is a great danger to others, especially if he is engaged in any occupation where milk or other raw food is handled. This typhoid carrier condition may persist for many years—even for life—although sometimes an operation on the gall bladder will cure it.

It is not always necessary for a person actually to have had the symptoms of a disease to become a carrier of it. For example, you may be exposed to a case of diphtheria, but possess enough natural protection so that you do not show any symptoms even though a laboratory test would prove that there are many diphtheria germs in your throat or nose. In such cases you may become a carrier and a dangerous one. The danger here is that no one knows of the condition and it is hard to enforce the precautions necessary to protect other persons. It is possible to become a carrier of other diseases besides typhoid fever and diphtheria. The best way to guard against becoming a carrier, or if you are a carrier to guard against spreading disease to others, is to cultivate good habits of personal hygiene. Be particular about washing your hands; keep your fa-gers away from your mouth and nose, and cover up each cough or sneeze with your handkerchief. There is still a better way to guard against catching diphtheria, typhoid fever or smallpox. Be immunized against them by your family physician.

Miss Frances Fuller Honored
Miss Frances Fuller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fuller, who is attending normal school at Chico, Calif., was one of three girls in northern California to win membership in Delta Phi Upsilon, a national kindergarten primary honorary professional fraternity. She recently went to Santa Barbara, Calif., for an initiation.

Only two chapters of this fraternity have been established on the Pacific coast. Until recently it was limited to the larger eastern colleges.
