Masters, of Frankfort, Ind., thought they had seen everything on their trip to Hood River when they returned down the Washington side. They went up the highway and crossed over the new bridge instead of continuing on the Mount Loop, under the impression that they were on the right road. They enjoyed the trip down the river again, but are planning to go to Hood River to see the valley and the mountains, as they feel that they will have to come all the way from Indiana to see it if they go home without the view.—From Portland Telegram Auto Camp Notes. Sunday Fire Incidents Never were so many funny looking costumes seen in Hood River as Sunday morning. Men appeared in night-shirts, covered, of course, with overalls, pajamas and bed room slippers. A dozen or more men were on the scene in their golf tops. The ladies were out in many strange forms of head dress. Indeed, it was a queer looking audience. The fire attracted residents of the Underwood and White Salmon country and stimulated travel over the interstate bridge Sunday afternoon. C. S. Piper, cameraman for The Oregonian Science Review, received from A. S. Kistad informing him of the fire, and suggesting that an effort be made to film it for the news reel. Piper at once called Wells Bennett, Portland motorcycle dealer and holder of a number of national records for speed and endurance. After obtaining an additional supply of film, the pair left Bennett's establishment at 8:10 and at 8:30 Piper was on the scene taking pictures of the blaze. The ride over the highway, according to Piper, was one that he will not forget and does not want to repeat. In their effort to reach the scene as quickly as possible, Bennett chose the fastest machine in his shop, which was not equipped with a sidcar or tandem. With his motion picture machine strapped on his back, Piper crowded into the saddle of the machine with Bennett and the two were on their way. A second motorcycle which was in the party carried the tripod for the camera. After approximately 150 feet of film had been taken, Piper and a number of others who had been spectators at the fire went down to a slough near the vinegar plant and picked up a number of trout which were floating on the surface. The contamination of the water by the vinegar, lime and other substances which flowed into it from the destroyed plant. Piper reported bringing back a number of 15 good-sized fish and declared that there were many more on the surface of the water when he left. Some of the firemen were endeavoring to place another head of hose at the Kelly Bros. warehouse. A monkey wrench was in demand. E. W. Kelly entered the warehouse to seek the implement. When he was ready to make his exit, he found the door at which he had entered jammed. While Mr. Kelly was in no danger, as other doors were available, the latter, he feared might create disastrous drafts. He began hammering on the jammed door, and this gave rise to the rumor that a man was trapped in the building. The crowd was wildly excited for a time. Before the arrival of the O.-W. R. & N. passenger locomotive a car of vinegar and one of pectin, loaded for shipment, were in danger on the vinegar plant siding. The auxiliary fire truck was hitched on, and with the aid of man power the cars were hauled to safety. Later the locomotive moved a long string of cars out of the danger zone. Dozens of small boys were possessed of a peeve all day Sunday, because fathers went to the fire without arousing them. Those who slept through the big blaze will be mad for a week. When the flames were shooting from every square foot of the top and sides of the big vinegar factory, there was nothing else for the firemen to do but emulate the tactics of a famed negro regiment during the Civil war. "They fought bravely and then fell back," was the way the reports of that regiment read. The firemen, in the face of a heat that fired clothing and blistered faces and hands, were forced to fall from the fire at times that it was difficult to reach the seething mass with water. They had to concentrate their efforts around the edges. Insufficient hose was the most serious handicap of the fire department Sunday morning. The water supply of the Apple Growers Association was a boon to the fire fighters Sunday morning. The entire supply of the Association's reservoir on the Heights was quickly made available, and it was needed. The efficiency of the Hood River Fire Department was proven beyond a doubt Sunday. Their task was a huge one, and many citizens volunteered their aid. In commenting on the fire Chief Volstead says: "We certainly want to thank citizens for their help. It was orderly and effective. There was no hysteria noticeable anywhere Sunday. Citizens joined our ranks and helped out materially. They responded magnificently. We certainly needed their help when the fire was at its most threatening point. It was gratifying to have them work with us as they did." Mr. Fred Howe was one of the first persons of the city to observe the fire Sunday morning. He saw it from her bed room window and hastened at once to telephone the alarm. Through the dispatch of the Oregonian News Reel service, Hood River folk at the Riello theatre Monday night were privileged to view movies of the fire. The pictures were hurried here by special motor delivery. Herald's through residential streets announced the coming of the pictures and the theatre was crowded. Ed Rand, of Portland, state fire marshal, who arrived here Monday to join local fire officials in an investigation of the fire, said he and his associates were unable to uncover any clue that might give them an inkling as to the cause of the fire. Rand said that investigation had developed absolutely no cause for suspicions of incendiarism. While here Mr. Rand visited his brother, Andy Rand. Citizens have missed the 7 and 7:30 o'clock whistles of the vinegar factory. They had become accustomed to regulating their morning hours to the whistling. Selah Camp Fire News The Selah Camp Fire Girls met last Friday at the home of Gertrude Buelow, where all enjoyed a marshmallow roast. The monthly ceremonial was held last Thursday at the home of Genevieve Hignam. Plans for the raising of money for a two weeks' camp at Lost Lake for all county Camp Fire Girls were suggested. The Selah Camp Fire Girls made candy and sold it at the junior high track meet Saturday. Columbia Blazing Rising at the rate of a half inch an hour, the Columbia river, as a result of the previous week's warm weather on headwaters, had reached a stage of 22 feet above low water Sunday. While the river was expected to rise several more feet, so lowland gardens are at present menaced. Cooler weather on the headwaters was expected to check the freshet, and mid-Columbia truckers anticipated that they would pass this season without flood damage. Old Man Hurt by Car J. B. Bullard, 55, transient, damaged by lights of two automobiles, as they met on the Columbia River highway Sunday night, stopped in front of one of the cars, and was knocked over a 30-foot embankment. Albert Thomas and M. C. Apperson, Portland young men, brought the old man to the city hall here, and later he was taken to the hospital, where an examination showed him to be suffering from a broken shoulder blade and bruises. CAMPERS FOR BOY SCOUTS SUCCESSFUL The successful campaign here to raise $2,000, to be used in completing a full time Boy Scout director for Hood River and Wasco counties, was successful. Wasco county will raise $2,500 for the project. The following names of banks was written to citizens by V. O. Follenius: "I take this opportunity to thank all those who helped to make possible the success of the above mentioned campaign of the Hood River county council of the Boy Scouts of America. "I would mention especially the 514 contributors representing all creeds and every section of the valley; the 47 workers who, in addition to their own subscriptions, gave literally hours and even days of their time to the campaign itself; the churches, whose unselfish devotion was an indispensable factor in bringing about success; the newspapers, which generously opened their columns and so effectively wielded the editorial pen in the interest of the cause; the American Legion; the civic clubs and fraternal orders; the women's organizations and men's brotherhoods, and theatres. "All of this remarkable cooperation made it possible to conduct a campaign which in many respects was unique in the history of Hood River county. All sections of the valley worked harmoniously together. Racial differences were forgotten. The whole valley, in fact, was united in a movement, the purpose of which is to safeguard the interests of its young men and boys. "The management of the local Boy Scout council recognizes that a new and larger responsibility rests upon its shoulders. It pledges the public its best endeavor as it undertakes to administer the great trust which has been committed to it. The Boy Scouts must and will become an increasingly effective instrument of service in the interest of a bigger and better Hood River valley."

TENNIS ENTRIES ARE COMING IN Entries for the fourth annual Hood River county junior tennis championships tournament, to be held from June 8 to June 23 on the Benedict and Country club tennis courts, are coming in rapidly. From present indications this tournament promises to be the largest held in this city to date. The events this year will be: Girls' singles championship and Kreese cup, boys' doubles championship and Hamilton cup, girls' doubles championship and Kell cup, mixed doubles championship and the two Franks cups, girls' singles consolation with a tennis racket for prize and boys' singles consolation for which there is also a tennis racket. These tournaments were primarily started to encourage tennis play in boys and girls just old enough to handle a racket. Victor C. Follenius, who is working with the committee this year, is proving invaluable in fostering this aim. He is in touch with the younger boys and girls constantly through his club work and is able to explain personally to all those interested just what the consolation tournaments are. These give the beginners an equal chance with the experienced players to triumph in a tourney of their own choice the first round of the championship singles are played off. Anyone wishing to enter any of the events in this tournament may do so by sending in their names to any of the following: Elizabeth Derfolk at the Riello theatre Monday night were privileged to view movies of the fire.
