Colman, and wife and Mr. and Mrs. Torrey Davidson of Hoquiam, and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Masters, of Aberdeen, on recreational tours. The party visited Baker's National park and climbed the mountains. Members of the Washington State Teachers' Association and Dr. Colman returned their Baker courtesy with a trip to Hooded Ina and a climb of Mount Hood.

"ADVENTURERS" WAS SUBJECT OF SERMON. "Adventurers" was the subject of the sermon delivered by Dr. James A. Young at the students of Pacific University at Forest Grove, Dr. Young, who took his subject from Deut. 33, "Turn ye to the North," said: "Those of you who are readers of the Old Testament will notice that its writers give to history a spiritual interpretation. Their problem in dealing with it was to trace the moral and the spiritual effects of God. They were indifferent to a great many things: War and commerce, the arts and sciences, the material progress of the world in which they lived moved them but little, but they have established the standard by which all historic estimates of even modern life are ultimately to be measured. And what, pray, is the stable and instructive element in history? What is the great question that historian and the spiritual effects of God? This, simply: 'What has God wrought?' The author of the book, out of which our text is taken stands on the threshold of a great crisis in the history of Israel. Some few months ago I listened to an address by one who was a visitor to Japan. The speaker told his audience something of these great religious Asiatic in their source. He stated that Shintooism was merely ancestor worship, and that its genius was to keep the strong men of old time ever in the minds of their devotees. And the writer of the book of Deuteronomy had this problem: He would convince his readers that during great and eventful years in which the children of Israel wandered between the Euphrates, the Nile, and the country of Aram, and in the face of brilliant activities Jehovah was their God. That was the truth he would bring home to their hearts, and it is a truth which must be brought to the hearts of us today; the truth that the God Jesus came to reveal is source, is power, and life. I hope I am speaking to those who have the spiritual life in their country and the world at heart, for our great need is for spiritually minded men of the world. To construct a story from this scripture is not a difficult task. The children of Israel were on a long journey. Even today we catch sight of their mouldering camp-fires; and the writers of old time have fashioned their wanderings into epic. Every battle they fought, every water-hole they dug; every march they contemplated was flooded with divine significance. Here, then, is the simple story. The Children of Israel had reached Mt. Sinai today; the truth that the God Jesus came to reveal is source, is power, and life. But what is faith? It is a way of thinking that goes forth into the unknown and reports something there! It is an assurance and a conviction which becomes a personal trust and a personal life. It is a life of absolute and daring commitment to the will of God. It is that faculty of soul which we use in every day life turned towards God as He is revealed in Christ Jesus. It is the power of meditation from the man of action! We are called to become adventurers in faith and obedience. It is one thing to hear; it is another thing to obey the voice when it is heard. Every adventurer into the unknown, Boone and Carson and Clark, piercing the darkness of the silent places! And it is the condition of 'finding.' Shakespeare with his fine genius preaches us a noble sermon on Hamlet. Hamlet is nothing more or less than a pathetic illustration of how disastrous to the soul and to the world is the separation in the same man, of the dreamer from the doer, the thinker from the man of action! Let us not better our minds about religion according to theology; rather with religion according to Jesus. Let us not have a full knowledge of all Biblical doctrines. Religion is being sated in a theological way these days. We are weary, are we not, that theology sometimes goes astray, but how comforting it is to know that when theology goes astray it cannot take religion with it!
