Just Little Stories

P. L. Tompkins last week discovered a blighted bough in a pear tree. He cut off the end of the bough and brought it to the office of the Hood River Experiment station. The burned leaves evidenced the working of fire blight, a disease that brings dread to the heart of fruitgrowers.

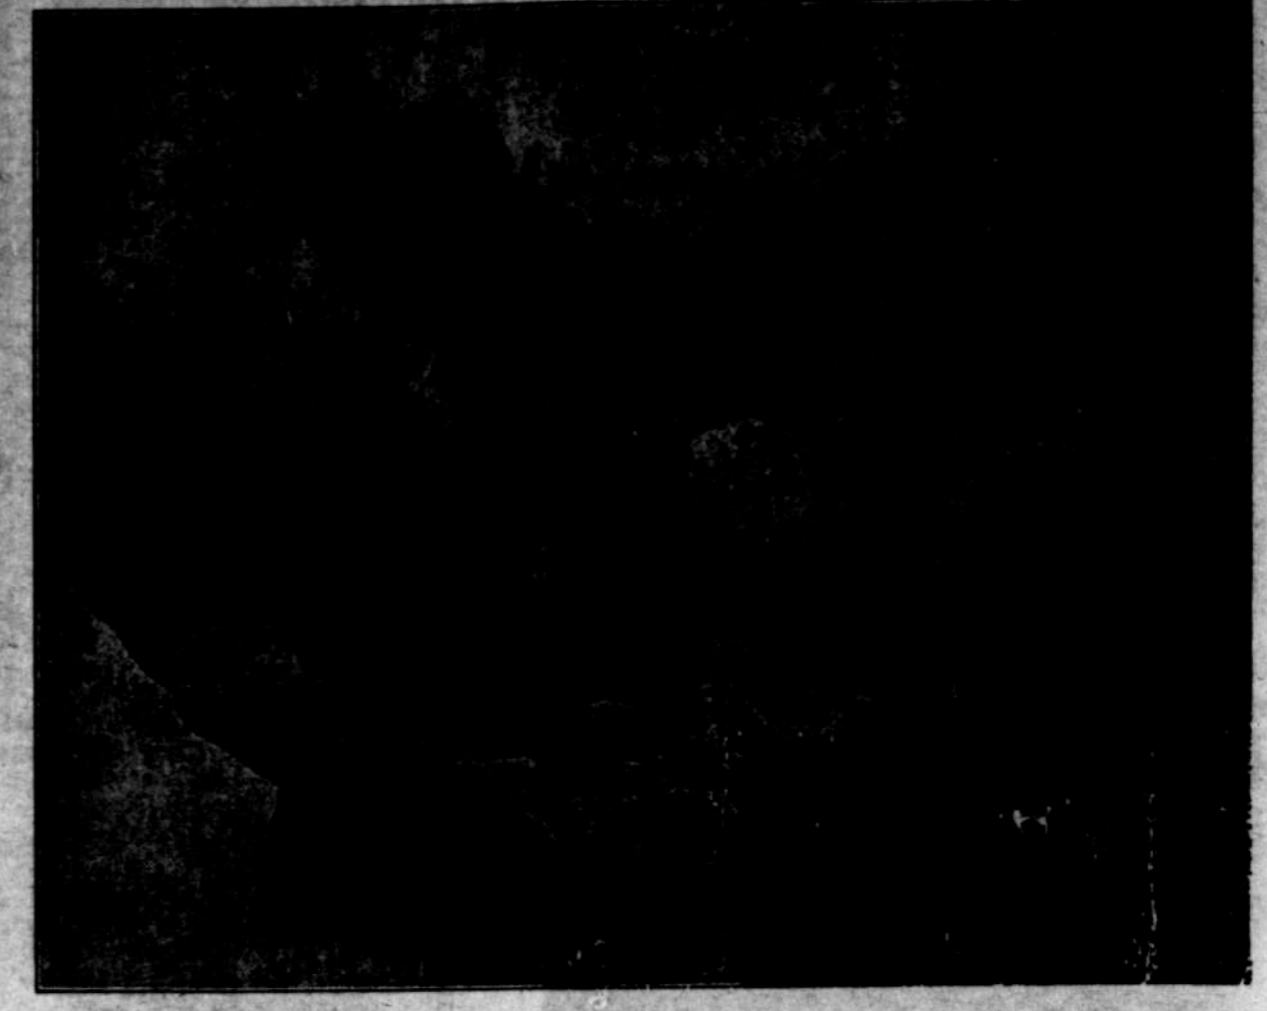

Marsh Isenberg viewed the specimen. He lifted the branch and pointed out the remains of a hornet nest. Instead of disease, as Mr. Tompkins learned through an investigation, the leaves had been burned with a torch. The hornet nest had been stung by a hornet, and in vengeance he entered the orchard one night and burned out the bees.

Indian Woman Fined

Eliza Smith, Indian woman of a tribe east of The Dalles, who was apprehended by District Forest Ranger Wheeler, of Herman station, pleaded guilty Thursday before Justice of the Peace Blagg and paid a fine of $5 for leaving a campfire burning. Eliza explained through an interpreter that she and her family had been picking huckleberries. It was raining, she said, when they left their campground, and she thought the fire had been extinguished.

Ranger Wheeler said that he had arrested two Indians for campfire offenses this season. Both, he said, had conducted themselves honestly when brought before the courts.

WORLD TITLE FINALS AT PENDLETON

At the right is Paddy Ryan, holder of the Roosevelt Trophy and world championship for all around cowboys, which he will defend in the finals of the Roosevelt Trophy contests at the Pendleton Round-Up, September 16 to 20. At the left is Yakima Canutt, the first holder of the title, from whom Ryan won in 1924. They are holding the famous trophy, which was put up by the Roosevelt Hotel, of New York.

Whose name is to be gloriously inscribed on the 1925 Roosevelt trophy at Pendleton as third world's champion all round cowboy, alongside those of Yakima Canutt and Paddy Ryan, who have held the coveted title during the past two years? Who's going to be third? Will it be Ed Herrian, of Antrock, Neb., who comes with 100 points already scored toward its possession, or will Paddy again upset the heavy lead of a rival, and win it for the second time? Or will some other cowboy depose 'em both, and become the next world's champ?

With more than a score of potential contenders in the field for the last leg of the contests to be decided at the famous Pendleton Round-Up, September 16 to 20, inclusive, the foregoing questions rank with who'll win the world's series in baseball in importance. For what the pennant is to the big league ball clubs, so is the Roosevelt trophy to the wild western sport contest arenas.

Awarded as it is on a point basis for the performance at both the Cheyenne Frontier Days rodeo and the Pendleton Round-Up, by the famous Roosevelt hotel of New York city, with points being awarded in the broncho busting, bulldogging and steer roping events, and day points in the wild horse race, the Roosevelt trophy championship becomes just as real as Jack Dempsey's. He who wins is a he-champ, a world title holder for sure.

Ryan comes to Pendleton to defend his championship without a single point in his favor, but having qualified at Cheyenne. Ethelred against him are Herrian, of Antrock, with 100 points won for first place in bulldogging at Cheyenne; Bob Crosby Keena, N. M., with 60 points for second place in roping at Cheyenne; Norman Cowan, Cheyenne, with 60 points also won there for second in broncho busting; Novata Sims, of Lenaph, Okla., has 50 points for third in bulldogging in the first leg of the trophy contest, and Chick Hannan, of Miles City, Mont., and Dugan Smith, of Miller, S. D., each have nine points won in the wild horse race.

Any one of them may win. In last year's Roosevelt trophy contest at Pendleton, in the final battle, the trophy stood to go to Yakima Canutt; Hugh Strickland, or Paddy. The latter won when Canutt was thrown and Strickland's "head came loose" making a spectacular ride on No-Name.

And last year Paddy came to Pendleton with no more points than he has now, but rode away a world champion. Will he repeat? At least, he's favorite, though battling against large odds.
