WAR OFFICE FEARSOME PLACE

According to Captain Bairnsfather, British institution is designed to be an annoyance.
 I have not been to the British war office very often, writes Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather in "From Mud to Marl," but I have never lost the odd sensation that it gives rise to. You enter the building and fill out a form. In time a Boer war veteran tells you boisterously to "follow the girl." The girl, a guide of sorts in an engineer's dark brown overall, sets off sullenly down a cement passage, with a group of assorted officers pursuing. She, I fancy, reveals in the intricacies of those catacombs.
 Having apparently described a complete parallelogram in a forbidding-looking corridor, you suddenly come upon a lift. It is always disappearing upward when you arrive. It comes down suddenly and disgorges an assorted crowd; headed by the girl guide, you enter and are taken up. We all repeat the corridor-and-parallelogram business. Nothing but the girl guide can save you now.
 Lost in the war office! How awful that would be! I can imagine how a visitor who had lagged behind the guide would stop, suddenly realizing that he was lost; how he would vainly beat on those stone walls and scream for help; how a typist would find his skeleton weeks later in an attitude that evidently showed that he had succumbed while endeavoring to gnaw his way through a door.
 I followed the guide and, after being handed to several officials, at last came up with the official whose duty it was to prevent, if possible, anyone from seeing the officer who had summoned me by letter.—Youth's Companion.

TREASURE TROVE IN LONDON

Chance Discovery Has Led Antiquarians to Believe They Are on Eve of Rare Find.
 A chance discovery of a piece of blue enamel, curiously marked, by H. S. Gordon, a London mining engineer, has turned a vacant plot, where garden truck was grown, into a treasure trove. Today diggers are busy digging and sifting every bit of the earth, believing that it is on the edge of an old Roman cemetery, used centuries ago.
 Digging into one part of it the men say they can trace London's history by strata to thousands of years ago. It is estimated that London's level increased at the rate of one foot a century. Things appear to have been thrown into the place, which must have been a queer pit, as though it had been a place for refuse. Its rare treasures are mostly broken bits of jewelry, china, glassware, etc. One exquisitely carved ornament of pure gold, evidently part of a golden collar, was found, and is estimated to have been made between 400 and 500 B. C.
 Some of the most interesting objects are broken pipes, a whole series ascending through nearly four feet of soil, illustrating the pipe's evolution from the days of Queen Elizabeth.

Progress on Isle of Man.

On the quiet and picturesque Isle of Man, famed famous by Hall Caine's fiction, an ancient pump of the chain-bucket variety, built into a masonry abutment on the face of a rock cliff, lifts its endless load of water some eighty feet from the pool below, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. For many years a big steam engine of obsolete form, slow and extravagant of fuel, attended to the duty of turning the chain shaft. But now the old boiler and cylinder are gone, and in their place a modern wind motor has been installed, its slim, efficient steel form rising from the cliff top in striking, yet not inharmonious, contrast with the primitive ruggedness that marks the earlier work of man and nature. The whirling 25-foot wheel of the new motive power now is drawing up 14,300 gallons of water an hour, as an average figure, and it is significant of the value of modern methods that the saving of fuel, no longer needed for a hungry boiler, soon paid the cost of the mill.
