CHAMBER OF COMMERCE NEWS

(From Apple City Progress)

Colonel W. B. Greeley listened patiently for two hours last Friday afternoon to numerous reasons why the application of L. L. Tyler of the Cascade Development Company, should be granted and to reasons why it should not.

As a result of a notice received from the Portland Chamber of Commerce that that organization had taken an interest in the application, he allowed two representatives at the hearing, the chamber reduced its delegation to two. The American Legion and the Crag Rats who had not been asked for an opinion on the first hearing, secured permission to send two delegates each. The chamber was represented by R. E. Scott, president, and H. G. Ball; the Legion by Kent Shoemaker and Harold Herscher, who were chosen by the Legion executive committee the night before to favor the tramway. Mr. Ball, speaking for the chamber, said that Hood River county had taken an active interest in favoring the building of each road to the mountain and favored the tramway as a continuation of the original plan to develop the mountain for both summer and winter sports.

John Annala said the Crag Rats had taken no action but that individual members were not opposing the project. Forty-two organizations were represented, all but two, the Mazamas and the Eagle Club, spoke in favor of the tramway.

When the application was first presented the Mazamas, the pioneer mountaineering organization of Portland, appointed a committee to investigate. This committee recommended that the Mazamas could not do violence to their feelings to the extent of taking a stand for the project, but that the Mazamas could not, and should not, be interested, broadly considered and without laying themselves open to the charge of being narrow, self-centered and unprogressive, therefore, protest against it. This report, made by such men as John Scott, was rejected by the unanimous vote of the Mazama Council. The Mazamas were well represented at the Friday meeting. Practically every organization present was a member of the Mazamas. We have the highest regard for their opinions which included the fact that they had been born in the shadow of the mountain and had learned to love it and for sentimental reasons did not want to see it marred by any mechanical climbing device. Charges of commercialism were made from one side and selfishness from the other.

Irving E. Vizing, president of the state chamber, struck the keynote when he said, "What must be considered is the greatest good for the greatest number."

J. Landlie, who has an even 100 trips to the top of the mountain to his credit, said he represented sentiment. We respect his feeling, but as John T. Dougal told us at the Tuesday lunch, "Times are changing and the greatest number will ask that the permit for the tramway be granted."

Colonel Greeley, speaking before the meeting, stated it involved a great deal of responsibility for him to settle this question which involved primarily the manner in which the public shall use resources which the public owns. He advised that in this age of motorized transportation and in view of the development of a road 25 years in the nature of road building and the opening up of vast areas to the gasoline and motorizing public that we stop look-and-listen and before it is too late start a program that will guarantee posterity a recreational area in its natural state for those who in following generations might want to get away from that disagreeable odor of gasoline.

Colonel Greeley, although himself opposed to the tramway, is apparently open minded in the matter and expressed a desire to carry out the wishes of a majority of the people. If he does this, there can be no doubt but what the permit will be granted and Oregon can continue with plans for a hotel at Cloud Cap and invite the world to the Switzerland of America.

Colonel W. B. Greeley, United States Forester, who denied the application of L. L. Tyler for a permit to build a tramway and aerial on Mount Hood, arrived in Portland last Monday to study the question of forest fire prevention. He will, also, be required to reconsider the tramway application. It was quite natural that Colonel Greeley should deny the application on first hearing. This action on his part would require those interested in the project to make a showing. This showing is being made by letters and newspaper articles and many have advised that they will call on Colonel Greeley in person. The Oregon Chamber favors the project and has sent letters to the different Chambers of Commerce in the state asking them to express their opinion. The Hood River Chamber of Commerce has also mailed letters to the different chambers asking them to support the project as a statewide attraction that will prove a drawing card for the entire state.

This development will be the first of its kind in the United States and the news of a cable-way to the top of Mt. Hood will travel to every small town. There is a long list of similar developments in Europe and especially in the Alps. They have not detracted from the grandeur of the Alps but have furnished an attraction that has drawn a lot of people to the great mountains where they can view from dizzy heights without the exertion of climbing.

At this time, when the State of Oregon is making a bid for tourist travel, and the Hood River Chamber of Commerce industry known, it does seem that advantage should be taken of a development that would tend to make Oregon the Switzerland of America.

It is interesting to note that Oregon has in mountainous country in the Cascade Range alone over three times the total area of Switzerland, there being 19 snow-capped peaks all of which, with the exception of Mt. Hood, are isolated and inaccessible by motor, and available only to the mountain climber.

Mr. Tyler expresses the opinion that of all the mountains in the United States, Mt. Hood offers the greatest topography, grand and commanding position, historically and geographically, located on three transcontinental railroads and with three highways leading to the mountain. He maintains that it is accessible to the greatest number of people, and it is for these reasons that it should be the first mountain whose summit should be accessible to all.

Mr. Tyler goes on to say that Mt. Hood has the diversification of scenery and panoramic view that is desirable from the tourist standpoint; the snow-capped peaks, the great ranges of the rivers, the streams and gorges arising from the crater, the wheat fields and farms of eastern Oregon and Washington, the Columbia, Hood and Willamette river valleys, the great ranges of snow-capped mountain peaks, the glorious sunrise and sunset and the vast forests dotted with sparkling lakes. He estimates that 90% or more of the population of the United States, in this wonderful view by physical inability, danger involved and time required.

He who has advertised that Mt. Hood is the easiest mountain to climb might well differ with Mr. Tyler's estimate of the number that are now denied the opportunity of this view, but it is a fact that 90% does not mix with a very small number who are not able to drive to Cloud Cap Inn and Government Camp and do not climb. Does it matter whether it's because they are unable or unwilling to make the effort? The fact is they don't climb and another fact is that the more people we can attract to Oregon the more prosperous our state will be.

The Hood River Guides are in receipt of a cordial invitation to again participate in Portland's Rose Festival. The invitation which is signed by S. C. Pier states that the Portland Rose Festival in connection with the wonderful pageant will be greater and finer than ever this year.

Mr. Pier says, "In 1925 you sent to Portland that wonderful marching body, The Hood River Guides. We must have them again and that's all there is to it."

With this invitation there is nothing for the Hood River Guides to do but go. Mr. Pier suggests that the Crag Rats would get a steady cheer from one end of the parade to the other.

Committees from the Drum and Bugle Corps, the Crag Rats and the Guides have been meeting to work out plans.

Plans being considered call for a Hood River unit consisting of a Drum and Bugle Corps, The Guides, and the Crag Rats with a possible float of some representing Mt. Hood.

Several of the Crag Rats are active Guides. If the Crag Rats enter the parade their places must be filled. If you know of a good prospect let us have his name.

There are two kinds of advertising—advertising that pays and advertising that doesn't pay. In this day and age when everybody is advertising, it pays to advertise, numerous and sundry schemes are concocted to relieve the business man of a piece of change for advertising. These golden advertising opportunities are offered and the busy merchant in such great numbers that he has become dizzy and apparently falls for some scheme that has as its main object the payment of the promoter's expenses.

The Chamber of Commerce offers to relieve the busy business man of the responsibility of rejecting many of these proposed schemes. A secret committee has been appointed for this particular job. This committee will not appear in person but they will sponsor the program for next Tuesday's lunch. Without stretching our imagination we can see how it might well be worth any business man's time to attend next Tuesday's lunch at the Wankoma hotel.

The Crag Rats are organized to conduct trips without charge. Their members consist of men who enjoy the hills and mountains. They make their different trips for their own pleasure, but get additional enjoyment out of taking others on trips with them. Last Sunday, April 23, led by L. Anderson, climbed Wind Mountain, recently purchased by Judge Derby. The climb was made from the north side and proved to be a stiff little spring try-out. The view was perfect and the view from the top was grand. Indian legends and bits of history caused the climbers to vision the expanse of country below and the hills around as they furnished shelter, camping spots and battle fields for the pioneer who ended his life down the mighty Columbia to establish his pioneer home in the then Wild West.

The day is in the open, with evidence of approaching spring on every hand, brought the climbers to a full realization of the wonders of our outdoors.

On Sunday, April 24, Crag Rat Donnersberg will lead a party up Larch Mountain. Fred has announced his program as follows: Leave Hood River at 10 o'clock Saturday night, leave Multnomah Falls at midnight and arrive on top of Larch Mountain in time for sunrise. There will be snow on the upper end of the trail which might make the trip rather a hard climb. Flash lights and lunches will be main essentials. Anyone desiring to make this trip should register with Fred Donnersberg at the Book & Art Store.
