After a pleasurable week goose hunting, the Parkdale hunters returned from California with a full bag.

Potatoes are still rolling from Parkdale. Two cars moved this week.

After a couple of weeks' rain which over six inches of precipitation fell, the weather changed and we have been having freezing weather at night time.

Last Friday the high school students finished the week with a comic debate and program.

All packing at the Parkdale community house was finished last Thursday and the warehouse was cleaned out by the end of the week. This is the earliest on record that the Upper Valley fruit has pulled away. Of course lots of it is in cold storage in Hood River and Van Horn. Perhaps it would be easier if we had a cold storage plant at Parkdale.

Due to the poor attendance at the show, the Cannon Movie Circuit has been forced to close down. It is a pity that sufficient interest cannot be held to keep at least one show going in the community.

There will be deer for sale at the Alder and any one wishing to buy an amount of it, please bring your own jars or jugs.

The moving picture outfit which has been on the mountain for the past two weeks staged a home stealing episode of the Alex Fortinos ranch.

STEVENSON

(From Skamania County Pioneer) Considerable road work is now under way along the North Bank highway in the eastern part of the county around Underwood. The maintenance crew is taking off the sharp corners and widening the road west of the old Hicks mill site. A new surface of gravel has also been spread in places.

At a meeting of the Skamania County Game and Fish commission held in the Bank building Monday evening discussion was held over the proposed new fish hatchery the commission is expecting to build. Nothing definite has as yet been done, but the commission hopes to have plans sufficiently matured in a short time to begin work.

Game Warden Chas. Ziegler has about completed this year's hatch of trout and more streams and more water has been planted this year than ever before. Several million fish of different varieties have been planted in streams and lakes and Mr. Ziegler says next year will see more fish and more water stocked.

The commission is also preparing to stock the county with a large number of Chinese and Hungarian partridges. This year no birds were received from the state game farm at Walla Walla and in all probability next spring the allotment for the year and next will be received and liberated in different parts of the county early enough to permit the new residents to mate and bring up a family.

The second annual "Fathers and Sons" night was held at the local Masonic lodge rooms Tuesday evening and in spite of the weather the hall was crowded.

The meeting was sponsored by the local Masonic organization and each member brought his son or the son of a friend.

After the regular session of the lodge was finished the doors were thrown open and the guests filled the room. W. G. Hufford, A. C. Sly and J. E. Crane had charge of the evening's entertainment and proved masters at their work. The Stevenson orchestra furnished music for the occasion and as usual were received in a splendid manner. After a few selections Supt. H. E. Rogers was introduced and gave very instructive and entertaining address taking for his subject "Business." Mr. Rogers handled his subject in a delightful and able manner and his auditors carried away many pleasant thoughts.

The next speaker was George Mos-tion, a Scout Master at Hood River, who gave a very interesting talk on Scouting. It is reported that Scouting hasn't a man as engaged over Scouting as Mr. Morrison. We have as he said, all the material legs with which to make a splendid troop, but do not seem to be able to get a leader.

The next speaker was Fred Wilson, of The Dalles, judge of the circuit court of Oregon. Judge Wilson addressed part of his very able address to the younger boys present and then turned his attention to the older boys and gave them much food for reflection. During his remarks he paid a high and glowing tribute to our forefathers, the pioneers of the west and especially his part of the two states.

LAVA CAVE WILL FURNISH STORAGE

Back in those terrible days when Mount Adams was in a state of volcanic eruption and when streams of molten lava ran over the countryside below it, nature fashioned for man a novel cold-storage warehouse.

Now, centuries after that eruption, man is taking advantage of nature's gift and one of the innumerable lava caves of the Mount Adams country has been pressed into service as a cold storage plant.

Geologists explain the presence of numerous lava caves and lava rivers in the Mount Adams district to the fact that the sheets of molten rock, flowing from the craters of the vicinity, cooled rapidly on top but continued to flow underneath.

Long passage-like caverns, some of them miles in extent, were formed beneath the surface of the lava crust. Some of these, it is said, are connected with the glaciers which cover the sides of Adams.

A number of "ice caves" are to be found about Mount Adams. These caverns, for some reason, are partly filled with ice and maintain, the year round, a temperature like that of an ice box. So nature, finding that nature had provided him with a natural refrigeration plant, has proceeded to put nature's gift to practical use.

The owner of the property on which one of these caves is located has built a wooden building over the entrance and is putting it to use as a storage place for farm products raised in the upper White Salmon valley.

In this particular cave, located but a few miles from Guler, has long been an attraction for motorists visiting the section. Its conversion to practical use, however, will not deprive visitors of viewing this queer prank of nature and the storehouse owner announces that the cave can be visited when an attendant is about to open the doors.

Bins and shelves have been placed in the cave and the plant will be in operation, as a naturally refrigerated cold storage place, within a few weeks.

Keep the Schools Open (By Dr. Frederick D. Stricker of the Oregon State Board of Health) Boards of health and school directors are often at a loss whether to close schools or to keep them open in the presence of an outbreak of communicable diseases. The problem is not so difficult with the milder infections, as public panic in the presence of these diseases is seldom great enough to force school closure. With the continued high prevalence of diphtheria, scarlet fever or infantile paralysis in a community, the health officials are often obliged to consider whether or not schools should be closed. One may well ask here, what forces health authorities to close schools in such circumstances. In general the answer is the pressure of public opinion.

The public can scarcely be blamed for wanting schools closed. They have been led, for years, to believe that the closing of schools would stop an outbreak of contagious disease. School superintendents, however, are beginning to see that the closed school is not an efficient barrier to the spread of an epidemic. Lay members of boards of health and some physicians yet believe that there is no other way to control outbreaks of contagious diseases. Under such circumstances, with public opinion clamoring that "something be done" one can hardly blame the press for following what would seem a sound, namely public opinion. It is unfortunate when the officials of a community do not act together. The community in its thinking people, the health department, the physicians and the press, will support the opinions and actions of its school and health authorities.

But what can be done in an outbreak of a dangerous communicable disease to control the situation, if schools are not to be closed? Seek out the sources of infection in the community. These sources can be discovered with the aid of the physician and the health department. Active effort must be made to locate, if possible, the source of infection. People, not things, spread diseases ordinarily. The closing of schools in time of epidemics or threatened epidemics usually results the result of well-intentioned but poorly informed public opinion.

A Bright Youngster A four-year-old, the son of a two-year-old, whose father is an aviator, was asked if she ever takes a ride in the airplane with her daddy. The following is the conversation: "No, Ma, too little. My papa says, 'When I get bigger I'm going up with him.'"

"Do you know Mr. Kolley?" "Oskley, Kolley?" "Oh my yes." "What car does your daddy drive?" "He drives all of them. He's down in the garage, but he owns a Pontiac."

Her daddy brought her down the street in a car a couple of blocks and instructed her to go back home on the sidewalk. "Was that a Pontiac?" "No, that was a Studebaker." "Where is your papa?" "He's down at Maynard & Childs. Maynard & Childs is dead." "E. W. Henry, and there's more to it, he's at the head, but he's gone out now, and Mr. Childs is looking after the business while he's gone." She had forgotten the letter "J" in E. W. J. Henry's name.—Contributed.
