ACT OF CONGRESS LEGALIZES BRIDGE

Word has just reached Hood River that President Coolidge approved on March 10 a special Act of Congress which declares the bridge across the Columbia here to be a legal structure. The bill was introduced and fathered by Representative N. J. Sinnott.

This action became necessary about a year ago when the War Department ruled that a change from the original approved plans was made during construction without obtaining approval. The change was the omission of five pile bents on the Washington approach which it was found could not be driven on account of rock and the substitution of a wooden span, together with other minor alterations.

Thanks to the efforts of Mr. Sinnott, the legal status of the structure is now fully and completely restored.

Bring your cut hair or combings to Mrs. M. D. Hicks and have a switch made for $1.25. Phone 2931.

Mr. Rettle covered the countries visited comprehensively. Great Britain, he says, has a great unsolved economic problem. The unemployed reach 2,600,000. Nineteenth of the wealth is owned by one-tenth of the people. Drink, Mr. Rettle declared, is a social evil, and the Church of England, he said, is losing out with the common people because of arrogance.

Germany, he says, is recovering slowly from exhaustion. Mr. Rettle said that Germans deny responsibility for the war, and he said that Hindenburg is working for peace. He characterized him as a praying man, liked by the people, a man working for a new Germany.

Perfect Cast Chosen For Old Ironsides

Wallace Berry and George Bancroft in the Paramount Picture "Old Ironsides" A James Cruze Production

"Old Ironsides", the historical and romantic spectacle production, to be at the Rialto theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is declared by motion picture experts to be the most perfectly cast photoplay ever produced.

In explaining the selection of players for the production, James Cruze, Paramount director, has this to say:

"Three entire months were required for the choosing of the players for 'Old Ironsides'. Each part was given the most careful and deliberate consideration. Even the two thousand plays used in the gigantic battle sequence between the frigate 'Constitution' and the Barbary corsairs were selected one by one with meticulous care.

"For the part of the boy, the leading male role, the requirements were as follows: He must be six feet, two inches tall and must weigh around 170 pounds. He must possess a rugged build and his personality must be ever changing. At times he must have the appearance of an awkward New England country-boy. Again he must have the fire, daring and courage to sweep one off one's feet.

"This part was by far the most difficult to fill of any of the featured roles in the production. Think over all the players on the screen today and see if you can find one who fills all of these requirements. Hundreds of interviews and scores of screen tests were taken of possible candidates before Charles Farrell was found. Those who have already seen the picture know that he fitted the role perfectly.

"For the role of the gigantic master-gunner of the frigate 'Constitution,' George Bancroft was our first, last and only choice. Bancroft fitted into the part as completely as the
