

A little boy went to a very nice shop on the Avenue to try on a new suit, being taken by his sister, a regal lady, graduate of Vassar. The youngster giggled and squirmed as the tailor, a young, brisk, well-dressed fellow, nimbly made the marks on his suit with chalk. Having entered fully into what he thought was the spirit of the occasion, the boy suddenly looked up and said to the tailor, in a confidential tone: "If you want to tickle my sister, try her stummick."
