FIVE ESCAPE FROM JAIL IN WOODSTOCK

Saw Through Steel Bars and Pick Locks.

Woodstock, Ill. — Five prisoners escaped from the county jail at Woodstock leaving behind them a series of sawed steel bars, cut screens, broken doors, and five other prisoners who didn't care to break out. Those who escaped are:

John Enos, alias Evans, thirty-one years old, of Springfield, accused of robbing banks at Huntley and Union, and whose alleged accomplices are serving penitentiary sentences.

Charles Taylor, alias Terry, fifty-three years, who, with his wife, Emma, was brought back from Oregon to be tried for the theft of jewelry from the Crystal Lake home of John Barrett, International Harvester company official, by whom they were employed.

Ellsworth Fowler, twenty-six years old, charged with automobile larceny.

Henry Odnbreit, age forty-two, awaiting trial for check forgery.

Joseph Levoian, forty years old, indicted for arson.

Enos and Taylor are ex-convicts. Sheriff Lester Edinger of McHenry county complained that Enos had been on his hands since January without being brought to trial, and this delay he charged up to State's Attorney Vincent S. Lumley.

The prosecutor explained that this delay was due to the fact that Enos was represented by Attorney William Carroll of Woodstock, a member of the state legislature, and formerly by Representative Roland Libonatti of Chicago. Under the state law a defendant who has a state legislator for his lawyer may not be forced to trial while the legislature is in session.

To escape, the prisoners first sawed a hole in a steel partition one-quarter inch thick between cells, and through this were able to get into the bull pen and then to the top of the cell block. Next they cut a wire mesh and picked a lock into an office. Sawing bars on this door let them to the basement, where they cut the bars and lock away to gain freedom.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Seven House of Correction prisoners sawed their way to freedom through a dormitory basement window.

Kansas City Gambler Is Slain by Machine Gunners

Kansas City, Mo.—Machine guns, blazing from ambush, ended the career of John Lazia, thirty-seven, a gambler. He had risen to swift riches and political power here.

Interpreting the slaying, in front of an apartment hotel, as a fresh outbreak of gang warfare, police seized Joe Lusco, a political rival of Lazia on this city's North side. Seventeen other men were held for investigation. Lusco's followers had been arrested, too, after the March city election disorders in which four men were slain.

Lazia, convicted recently of violating the federal income tax laws after a trial that focused attention on the mysterious sources of his revenue, died nearly 12 hours after eight bullets penetrated his body.

Two Bank Robbers Slain in Gun Fight

Erick, Okla.—Two bank robbers were killed by pursuing Texas officers in a motor car gun battle near Sweetwater. Their trail was picked up by Sheriff Walter Jones and Deputy Sheriff Joe Oney of Hemphill county, Texas, following a $200 robbery of the First State Bank of Allison, Texas.

Noted Chemist Killed

Newburyport, Mass.—Col. William Hult Walker, sixty-five, of Pasadena, Calif., and Bridgeton, N. J., high officer in the chemical division of the United States army during the World war, was killed as his automobile crashed into a tree near Seabrook, N. H.

Negro Prisoner Lynched

Bastrop, La.—A mob lynched Andrew McLeod, twenty-six-year-old negro farmer, after he was convicted of the murder of a white woman.

73 Years In Cascade Locks

BY JACK McCRARY

In these days people look back and wonder how the early settlers in the district around Bonneville and Cascade Locks managed to live, and I suspect lots of folks feel sorry for the pioneers. Still, life wasn't nearly as hard as one might think, for while there were no trains, automobiles, airplanes, highways or picture shows, we had good times and everyone had enough to eat and wear.

Settlers in this part of Oregon were running wood scows on the Columbia river when my parents came here in 1861, and the sawmills, the steamboats and the portage railroad furnished work for men who wanted jobs. Nearly everybody worked in the woods or on the river. Money was fairly easy and the settlers raised enough crops to feed their families and livestock.

Joe Latourell, for whom the falls down the highway were named, was one of the best known owners of a wood scow on the river. He hauled our household goods up from Vancouver when returning upstream after having been down to Portland with wood.

Captain Amos Underwood ran a wood scow, and so did Felix Iman who owned a sawmill just below the mouth of Rock creek on the Washington side. After I was grown and got to doing for myself I ran a boat for years up and down the river, between the Locks and The Dalles.

The settlers could get $1.25 a cord for their wood, and the owners of the wood scows sold for $4.50 a cord at The Dalles. In those early days The Dalles offered a big market for our cordwood.

Some of the boats were larger than others, but the majority carried about 100 cords. The prevailing west wind furnished power to carry the boats upstream and the current swept them downstream. They carried around 150 yards of canvas and it was quite a trick to navigate them. However, I don't recollect that more than five were ever lost. At times there were as many as 14 operating on the river. One or two could carry 200 cords. You may find it hard to believe, but I once ran a wood boat to The Dalles in eight hours.

The Bradford brothers' mill, across the river, Jim Thompson's mill on this side of the river, and the mill on Eagle creek were all closed down by 1870. The Inman mill operated for many years.

As work in the mills petered out in the late '60s, more and more settlers turned to cutting wood. They sold the wood as they cleared their places. This whole country was cut over by people who were selling firewood. The ground down where the fox farm stands was all heavily timbered at one time.

In 1874 Dick Woodward, who is still living in Cascade Locks, taught a school out near where the airport has been built. That was the first school in what is now Hood River county. He had to go to The Dalles to pass an examination. I don't suppose he was more than 17 years old.

The river was carrying more and more traffic all the time, and after the gold rush was over the movement of wheat down the river began to increase. People grew alarmed and became nervous when a line of business in which they are engaged falls off or peters out. I often think of that when I read the newspapers in these times.

The Oregon Steam Navigation company grew rich hauling supplies upstream to the mines in the '60s. About 1870 this trade fell off and many people thought the company was finished, but the gold seekers had learned that wheat could be grown in Eastern Oregon and Washington, and in the middle '70s there was a rush to take up land in what everyone thought a worthless country except for cattle.

The river trade really never began until the movement of wheat got under way, and the heaviest traffic flowed down the Columbia after the public thought the steamboat men were going to starve. I suppose there were 10 years when the boats paid the best. The steamers did their best business between 1872 and 1882. Those were the lush days of the river.
