Wind, Current and Rapids

Were Finally Overcome

After 47 Hours of Towing!

Most Powerful Steamboats on Columbia River, Towing Burrard No. 2 Dredge to Dam.

Here was a job which required equipment, seamanship experience, and ability to complete.

Columbia Construction Company's dredge Burrard No. 2 had to be towed from Portland to Bonneville. A high wind was blowing. The current of the river over Garrison Rapids was the swiftest it has ever been. These were nature's handicap towards landing the Burrard No. 2—but they did not defeat the towing companies handling this job.

For 47 hours three of the most powerful steamboats on the Columbia river fought "old man river". Five of these hours were needed to tow the dredge over Garrison Rapid. Here truly man's ability battled the elements. But the dredge was finally landed—a record which these two prominent towing companies are justly proud.
