

ROOSEVELT THEATRE IS PROVING POPULAR

Every cloud has a silver lining, according to Jack Gault, manager of the new Roosevelt theatre which opened last Wednesday night. "All the difficulties encountered during the first week have been ironed out and the theatre is now ready to step out and provide some real entertainment for the people of this vicinity," was the enthusiastic reply when asked how the new show house was getting along.

"First of all," he continued, "I want to thank those people who were kind enough to bear with us during the past trying week, and to assure them that we will show our appreciation by bringing them the kind of entertainment they desire."

"Our current feature picture, 'Lemon-Drop Kid' was selected to appeal, not only to the men on the reservation, but also for the families living in the district. It is a story from the pen of Damon Runyon, who has lately come into prominence as a writer of tales woven around characters he met as a newspaper reporter.

"Our next picture, beginning Friday, will be George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong and Kent Taylor in 'Limehouse Blues'."

The bat, though it resembles a mouse in appearance and its nocturnal habits, does not belong to the order of rodents which includes them. Bats form an entirely separate order of mammals, the Chiroptera, distinguished by the wing or membrane which extends from the body to the ends of the feet. Our bats are all insectivora, while many species of the Old world feed on fruits.

Tundra

Tundra is the cold, desert, treeless plains which form the Arctic lowlands of Europe and Asia. The name is also generally applied to a similar area in North America. The word is of Russian origin and means a marshy plain. The prevailing low temperatures are consequent on high latitude and proximity to the frozen northern ocean and result in very scanty vegetation.

go out on the job. The stuffed appearance comes from the fact that they wear kousks, or life belts, for some one is always falling into the river. The gold wash does not appear to annoy them, and they have grown proficient in throwing themselves into the crib when they see they are going to lose their balance. The king jackets keep them about until fished out by fellow workers.
