

Few Couples Celebrate Their "Golden Wedding"

Once in a while we read or hear of some couple celebrating their golden wedding anniversary. Despite the fact that the American life span has been extended golden wedding anniversaries are becoming fewer and far between. Unless they marry very, very young, the chance that a couple will live to celebrate the fiftieth wedding anniversary together (the large number of divorces not being considered) is about one in six. A New York life insurance company has recently released some interesting statistics on this subject. If a couple is married when the bride is eighteen and the groom twenty-three, they have a one to four chance of surviving to their golden wedding day. When they join up when the bride is twenty-two and the groom twenty-five, the chances are one to six. And those marrying after thirty-six, the figures show, have no right to expect a golden wedding at all. But 93 out of 100 couples can expect to enjoy their tenth or tin wedding together, while 777 out of each thousand couples can expect to see and celebrate their twenty-fifth or silver wedding anniversary.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Current prices for wives in Cyprus, Mediterranean island owned by Britain, range from $100 for a slim wench, to $500 for a buxom girl with plenty of curves. The buying and selling of girls for marriage is, of course, legal. The girls are the daughters of Turkish parents, who sell them to the highest bidders, usually Arabs from Palestine. A document has to be drawn up and stamped, and duty is paid. In the case of divorce, full recompense must be given; but in virtually every case the girls are contented.—Grit.

Ambition

Never be satisfied with what you are or what you have. In such satisfaction lies mediocrity. Ambition is the spur that makes men struggle with destiny. It is heaven's own incentive to make purpose great and achievement greater.—Grit.

STAR DUST
MOVIE AND RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

WELL, Marlene Dietrich has signed again with Paramount, despite the feeling shared by everyone, apparently, unless she turns in a really good picture next time she's done. Some of the smart alecs were discussing her when the news came through; they were saying that her first American picture, "Morocco," was by far the best she's done.

They claimed that Von Sternberg's direction has ruined her. She's not to have him as director of her next one. Neither will she have Lubitsch. But Lubitsch has promised to give her a really good director, so now let's sit back and see whom he picks!

A group of young American dancers, six men and two girls, has been engaged to dance in Garbo's next picture, the new version of "Anna Karenina." They're engaged because the Viennese dance mistress who was brought over to Hollywood turned out to be a mistress of the modern school of dancing, and turned violently ill when it was suggested that she do something of the "dear old Vienna" school, with waltzes and what-nots as the high points.

So this picture is to have a dance reel in Russia, and the young New York dancers who were sent for in a hurry are going out with no illusions. They figure that they'll probably be just so many faces on the cutting room floor when the picture is released. But their expenses are paid, and they'll get a look at Hollywood, and have plenty to eat while they're doing it (a very important consideration in the lives of dancers nowadays!), and what more can anybody ask?

Evelyn Brent is going to make a picture, which is good news for all of us who thought she was pretty well on the screen when she worked steadily. But alas! She'll just be the girl in a Wheeler and Woolsey effort called "Ni-Ni-Ni," which isn't too encouraging, no matter how you look at it. The girl just doesn't matter, in their pictures.

Seems funny that anything new could happen in news reels, but it has. The news is being dramatized. For example, when the Macon sank there wasn't a picture of the sinking to be had; it happened too suddenly. But there was a picture of the Macon in the air, taken the week before. And in a Columbia picture called "Above the Clouds" there were some excellent shots of a dirigible meeting with just such an accident as the one that befell the Macon. So what could be simpler than putting the two together, so that you and I could see just how it happened?

All this talk about Universal's being sold has a lot of people all jittery. It's been rumored that practically everybody will buy it, including one smart young man who wants to get an option on it and then sell it to some one else for a lot more money.

The low-down, I'm told, is that the Warner Brothers may buy it just for themselves, because so many other people have stepped into Warner Brothers' that it isn't their company any more. And they do like a movie company all their own, to make pictures with.

It's the subject that monopolizes all movie-company conversation nowadays. But old Carl Laemmle has been holding the fort for a long time now, and has turned down a lot of big offers, so it's my guess that he'll keep on hanging on, so that Laemmle, Jr. can go on making a lot of mistakes and a lot of good pictures.

Remember Clara Horton and Jackie Saunders? And Pauline Garon, who once was the wife of Lowell Sherman? They were all extras in a Warner picture, "Dinky," the other day.

And that reminds me of a girl whose name you wouldn't remember, who played tiny parts for D. W. Griffith a long time ago, and later had a Paramount contract, which didn't come to much.

I saw her recently. She retired when the movies just didn't want her, married a very wealthy man, and has become just one more of New York's mink-coated young women who have all the money in the world. Apparently she has nothing to long for; she's still beautiful, and can buy anything she wants.

But she asked me eagerly if I knew of anything that she could do in the movies; said that she'd be willing to do anything in the world to get back!

Merle Oberon is a very lovely person, more delightful off the screen than she is on it. She's amazingly frank; says whatever she thinks, despite the fact that the person she's talking to may spread her remarks on Leslie Howard or Noel Coward all over the front pages.

She and the other English movie stars have a way of making the American girls of the same standing look awfully unfinished and unsophisticated. I don't know why. But they're women of the world, and they show it.

Even movie stars can't have everything they want. Richard Barthelmess wanted to play the lead in the picture version of "Doctor Socrates," but Paramount bought it and the role goes to Gary Cooper, who at the moment is vacationing in New York with his wife.

Metro hopes that you and I and all the rest of us will accept Constance Collier as Marie Dressler's successor, but they're afraid to push the idea openly for fear that we'll object. So they're planning to ease her into the roles they'd picked for the glorious Marie, and win us over before we realize it. Seems funny, for Miss Collier is an actress who made a name for herself on the stage in roles quite different from the Dressler ones.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Buddy Rogers is back from making pictures in England and will return before long to make some more . . . Edward Robinson's "The Whole Town's Talking" is one of his best pictures . . . Mae Clark, that swell little actress who's been out of pictures for a year because of illness, returns to the screen in "Safe in Jail," opposite Jimmie Dunn . . . Claudette Colbert is having a two months' vacation; just now she's in New York . . . Ruth Chatterton may star in the picture version of "Jezebel," the play Miriam Hopkins did on the stage last year.

slenderizing panel up the front, to make it very becoming to the larger figure. The way the bodice is gathered to the youthful yoke and sloped at the back is not only very smart but it gives the comfortable fullness that women demand of house frocks. Made of cotton broadcloth, or printed pique this dress would be charming and every bit as chic as a sports frock!

Alterations in Place

Names Not Infrequent

How folks in a community will change the real name of a place, a river, mountain, etc., by gradual differences in spelling and pronunciation, is brought out on "Uncle Sam's Handbook on Geographical Names," published by the United States Geographic board.

Sometimes the natives will entirely reverse the proper name of a place, by carelessness or as a joke, over a long period. Horse Creek in California, for instance, is now mis-called Cow Creek. Breteche Creek, Wyoming, has been called Britisher Creek a long time, perhaps because it sounds like that.

The board found that the word Ozarks was corrupted from the French words Aux Arcs, pronounced exactly the same way.—Washington Post.
