

Gay Prints to Be in Favor for Spring Afternoon Wear

Gay prints, stamped with butterflies, flowers or flags and two-tone prints in basket weaves or star effects are shown for spring afternoon wear. They are designed with soft ruffled or knife-pleated flounces at the fairly low neckline and with numerous finely pleated inserts in the skirts, whose hems are from 6 to 7 inches from the ground.

With them go wide-brimmed hats of dark or light straw recalling the "merry widow" designs of years ago, sometimes cut with the abbreviated turned-up back brim (so often seen this season) and trimmed with a cluster of flowers or a tuft of ostrich feathers.

WHITE COLLAR NOW HAS COMPETITION

Dash of Pink Has Been Added to the Neckline.

No longer can we speak in terms of white accents for spring costumes, because a dash of pink has been added to the neckline. The white collar brigade is meeting with some real competition.

Since one successful accessory often is followed by another, there are pink cuffs, vestees, blouses, hats and various pieces of costume jewelry to rival the chaste appearance of the one-time favorite. Pale blue and tulle yellow also have appeared in the accessory field, but their entry did not create the furor of the delicate pink hues.

A glimpse of the neckwear counters is convincing proof that pink is sharing equal attention with white in the decoration of spring costumes. Frilly types of collars, cuffs and vestees predominate among the most recent arrivals, but there are tailored lines and pique sets of distinction.

The introduction of the vestee or gilet is the most recent development. Emphasis is placed upon the adornment which may be worn either on the outside of a dress front or with the edges tucked underneath. Organdie and mousseline are the most fashionable of the sheer fabrics and usually are featured in connection with Valenciennes lace and insertion.

Hindu Sari Is Taken Over for Spring Evening Wear

The evening innovation is the introduction of the Hindu sari which is both draped over the head as the easterners wear it, or it can also be draped about the shoulders as a scarf. Turkish trousers appear in glazed chintz for beach wear, and a wedding veil made like a sunbonnet in white tulle is edged around with orange blossoms.

Among 1935 Schiaparelli colors are carbon blue, which is darker than marine, to vishnu blue, a pale shade for evening which corresponds with a new pink called desert rose. Browns are prominent and off-shades of terra cotta are called Pilgrim, while a brighter or orange shade is called noonday sun. There are some delightful grays for evening in chiffon called centdres (ashes), and the printed glazed chintzes are charming in the softness of their tones and combinations of flowers.

WEAR FLOWERS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

'Tis said that fashions will be gay with flowers this season. The news of first importance in the realm of stylish flowers is the carnation. The favorite boutonniere of the moment is a big fluffy many-petalled carnation, white, pink, red or even navy blue. Garlands of flowers will be worn like a necklace. Add a flower bracelet if you will. A wreath in the hair, too, if it is evening. There is rumor in the air that hats will be trimmed in natural flowers—a special little contrivance to hold them and to permit removing to change for fresh flowers. The flower ensemble in the picture is interesting and very lovely. The turban and the cuffs of the gloves are made of shaded purple violets. The bows are of satin ribbon in a deeper shade.

REDINGOTE TURNS FORMAL IN STYLE

Coat-Like Garment Is Made of Crisp Sheer Fabric.

The good old redingote, daytime standby of the fashion world, has gone formal on us.

The coat-and-dress ensemble which has become a spring classic for well-dressed women is appearing now in advance showings of the summer-evening mode.

At first glance you wouldn't recognize the frothy concoctions as members of the reliable redingote family. But examine them carefully and there can be no mistake.

There is a strong tendency on the part of designers to make a coat-like garment of crisp sheer fabric, such as organdie or organza, and pose it over a slim sheath of taffeta. The organdie coat fastens loosely at the waistline, and is open the rest of the way down revealing the slip beneath.

Sometimes the redingote is of starched lace, and sometimes of organza or stiffened chiffon.

Usually it has short puffed sleeves, but sometimes it has long, loose ones.

The trick is that it must be sheer, revealing the sheath beneath.

WHIMS OF FASHION

A bumper crop of bumper brimmed hats is anticipated.

"Waterskin" is a new fabric which Schiaparelli uses for rain-coats this season.

Newest swagger coats have a flaring background fullness often swung from a shoulder yoke.

Jackets of printed crepe ensembles are seen among the newer arrivals in the evening-suit section.

"Greens in all the shades from pale to brightest tones, and mauves which by degrees reach to violets."

The knitted frock and suit is with us again—this time it is very smart to knit your own!
