a bunch of its members held a secret meeting in the Odd Fellows hall and, figuratively speaking, discussed ways and means of boiling Laber in oil. They were furious because he was threatening to take their homes if they did not pay up back rents or buy at his prices the property on which their houses stood. Frank Hall, president of the Civic club, presided. And as we recollect it, W. J. Carlson was present. In the course of the evening "Bill" Keeler got wind of the meeting and being possessed of the gall of a government mule, he mounted the stair to see what was going on. "Dell" Eliff was on the door. He wouldn't let "Bill" enter and "Bill" said he would enter, whether or no. So "Dell" offered to throw him downstairs. "Bill" went away. After the excitement subsided the club got down to brass tacks. It directed Frank Hall to write a letter to Governor Meier and to ask Secretary of Interior Ickes to investigate what it termed J. B. Laber's profiteering in land values within five miles of the dam. Those letters were written by Mr. Hall and are no doubt a matter of public record. And a delegation was appointed to call on the United States district attorney at Portland. The government sent a man in to check up. It was just about that time that Laber dropped the price of his lots to $100—and tied on the rider which forces every purchaser to buy lumber from him for a home. Now Frank Hall knows all this—and so does W. J. Carlson. And yet when the Civic club met three weeks ago to name a ticket in the municipal election it pooled its forces with the J. B. Laber crowd. "Bill" Keeler and Ira Owen helped nominate the ticket—and it goes without saying that they looked out for old Number 1. If the ticket wins, Laber wins. The lion and the lamb have laid down together. All of which brings up the question of why the Civic club has joined forces with J. B. Laber. What has transpired to make J. B. Laber and Frank Hall such warm cronies? The fellow who answers this question gets the fur lined bath tub. Laber has not changed his tactics. If you think he has, ask August Peterson, who just got through moving his house off a piece of Laber property. Or go ask Andy Lane.
