

Gen. Markham Inspects Dam

Guided by Capt. J. S. Gorlinski, Major General Edward M. Markham, chief of the United States army engineers, spent several hours going over the Bonneville dam project last Thursday.

Accompanied by Col. Thomas M. Robins, north Pacific division engineer, and Lieut.-Col. Charles F. Williams, second district Portland engineers, General Markham drove out from Portland to observe how work was progressing. What he saw must have impressed him, for afterwards he expressed himself as delighted with the work and said it was obvious that the dam would be completed in the summer of 1937, a full year ahead of schedule.

Few of the employes at the dam knew that General Markham was on the reservation, for there was no fuss or feathers. The party returned to Portland, and then drove up to Willapa harbor.

BONNEVILLE SCHOOL TO HAVE ORCHESTRA

Development of an orchestra in the Bonneville school has been undertaken by a Portland music teacher at direction of the school board. Efforts are being made to get up an orchestra of 35 pupils. The instructor is to receive $25 a month over a period of 90 days and if he does satisfactory work he is to be employed for the balance of the term. He is reported to be teaching music in a number of schools in Multnomah county. At Bonneville he will give a day and a half a week to the pupils.

Only seven persons in every 100, of the thirty millions who are dependent upon agriculture for a living, have bathtubs or showers in their homes. The remaining 73 persons in every hundred must carry water from wells or other sources of supply whenever they indulge in a bath in the family washtub.
