At the Theatre

A suicide, two murders and a fatal shooting provide a pleasant background for the latest Philo Vance screen yarn, with Edmund Lowe doing the Vancing this time, in "The Garden Murder Case", at the Roosevelt theatre Friday and Saturday, June, 26 and 27.

Mix up some ventriloquism and hypnotism and violent death and you've made it even harder for the detective. But Philo refuses to be baffled by the tangle of events and points the solution to the mystery.

The part of Zalia Greene, niece of a hardboiled financier, is played by the beautiful Virginia Bruce. She does a nice piece of stooging for Philo and winds up the show by becoming his bride.

Horse-racing and steeplechasing as the rich gentleman knew it furnish the opening sequences. A young fellow who is in love with an army officer's wife breaks his neck when he falls from his horse during a steeplechase, and from that point on the plot gets souper and souper.

Supporting roles are played by Benita Hume, Nat Pendleton, H. B. Warner, Jessie Ralph and Etienne Girardot.

Two tough mugs sprout wings—but not the kind you think—and lead a pretty exciting life to make a real show of "Ceiling Zero" coming to the Roosevelt theatre Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, June 28, 29 and 30.

The mugs, of course are Jimmy Cagney and Pat O'Brien. They say Jimmy likes milk and crackers and Pat goes for slippers, pipe and fireplace in private life, but these gents don't let anything like a private life stop them from slugging their women around before the camera.

Jimmy and Pat are a couple of war ace buddies who team up in a commercial flying proposition which tosses plenty of excitement their way. O'Brien, as executive, couldn't forget his buddies of the pioneer day of flying and together they fight the tough deals that confronted aviation in the years just after the war.

A new star, June Travis, furnishes the romance for "Ceiling Zero". The picture also offers comedy in carload lots to go along with the love and the thrills.

Sparkling comedy, captivating inspiring dancing, fine acting, lovely songs — put them together add a corking story, and you have Columbia's new musical film, "The Music Goes 'Round," playing at the Roosevelt theatre Wednesday and Thursday, July 1st and 2nd.

Prominently featured are Harry Richman, Rochelle Hudson, Michael Bartlett, Walter Connolly, Edward Farley and Michael Riley—and their "round and 'round of music.

Richman has long been considered one of America's entertainers. Whether in George White's "Scandals," Ziegfeld's "Follies," on the radio, in night clubs, or in musical comedies Richman has proved himself "tops". Now he is in the movies and the whole country is waiting to see what he does.

Miss Hudson is a young lady whose popularity has grown enormously in the past year or two. "Show Them No Mercy", "Curly Top" and "Les Miserables" are a few of her recent successes.

The show presents eight song hits.
