COUNCIL AIMS TO HALT FIRE PERIL

club, appeared with a committee of Townsends to ask the levying of as small a license fee as possible on the carnival which they want to bring to town the first week in September. The carnival would be held on property belonging to J. B. Laber in front of Frank Hall's residence.

Prince Koberg of Hood River, head instructor of the county swim campaign committee, outlined the plans of his organization for a six-day swimming school for children of this district the last week in August. The council promised him their cooperation, and Mayor Manchester appointed Councilman Merrill to arrange for a suitable beach. Last year 10 per cent of the county's total population received instruction at the free schools, including 85 children from Cascade Locks.

C. L. Rankin pointed out a new angle to the city's quest for a jail when he said Hood River county is paying rent to the city of Hood River for use of its jail, and very likely would do the same for Cascade Locks.

Action on the contractors' July estimate for the water system was postponed until Wednesday, due to failure of PWA officials to pass upon the recent change order in time for the meeting.

Ground Sloth Numerous Millions of Years Ago

Ground sloths strange lumbering beasts that the first human inhabitants of this continent may have hunted, were immigrants like the men, but they came from the opposite direction. Human migration came from the northwest, from Asia; ground sloths came earlier, and from the southwest, from tropical America, where the strange race of beasts had their first home.

Sloths lived long in South America without appearing on the northern continent, because through millions of years of the earlier part of the Age of Mammals there was a wide area of sea between North and South America.

When this closed over, perhaps thirty million years ago, intermigration of animals began between the two continents, and the first sloths appeared in North America. These developed four distinct genera, which ranged in size from a six-month calf to a short-legged elephant. The last of them became extinct a relatively short time ago; the skeleton of one of them, found in New Mexico and now in the Yale museum, still has its ligaments and part of its skin.

In South America also the group survived until the coming of man. Far down in Patagonia, in a cave, there were found large pieces of skin of one of these animals, with its coating of hair still on it, together with the sloth's skull. The cave also yielded evidence of human occupation while the sloth was still alive.

Gold Discovery in Alaska

Gold was first discovered in Alaska in 1848 in the gravels of Kenai river by P. P. Doroshin, a Russian mining engineer, who was then making an examination of the mineral resources of the district for the Russian-American company. In 1850 and 1851 Doroshin, with a working force of 14 men, prospected the gravels of two streams entering Kenai river between Kenai and Skilak lakes and those of a third stream tributary to the latter lake. Gold was found nearly everywhere in the gravels examined, but not in commercial quantities.

LONG-LIVED BURL

Ralph Williams of the West Coast Power company at Cascade Locks is the owner of a redwood burl which he has kept alive in water for more than two years—an unusual circumstance, he says. He once had a burl that lived nine months, but his present plant is still putting out brilliant green shoots and shows no sign of dying.

IT HAPPENED HERE

Concrete evidence that radical agitators are spreading their foul teachings among the young at Bonneville was revealed to the Chronicle reporter Wednesday when he asked two little girls on the government reservation what their names were. "We don't have any names," said one, "We belong to the government."
