MAN'S CONFESSION SOLVES SECRET OF OLD "BABY MIXUP"

Sensational Hospital Case of 12 Years Ago Is at Last Cleared Up.

Detroit, Mich.—The mystery surrounding a sensational "baby mix-up" case of 12 years ago was believed solved by the confession of Alphonse Vlemminck that he threw the body of one of the babies in the Detroit river after it smothered to death.

The baby given him through a nurse's error was the infant son of William C. Greatrex and not the child of Vlemminck's unmarried daughter, as he supposed. The babies were born at the same time in a Detroit hospital.

His latest story was the first time Vlemminck has altered his assertion of 12 years ago that he turned the baby given to him "over to a couple from Philadelphia" for adoption.

Spent Savings in Search.
Greatrex, grief stricken by the death of his wife at the birth of the baby, spent his savings in a fruitless search for his son in the belief Vlemminck actually had given the infant for adoption.

Vlemminck, an elderly Belgian with a long police record, recently was sentenced to serve 12 to 15 years for taking indecent liberties with a four-year-old child. During the investigations of the mixed baby case he admitted he was the father of the baby born to his daughter.

Greatrex confronted Vlemminck after his conviction and implored the Belgian to tell the truth regarding the fate of the infant. Vlemminck stuck to his original story at that time and it was not until the new account, that Greatrex lost hope that his child still was alive.

Questioning of the prisoner was conducted through a Belgian deputy sheriff. According to Sheriff Henry Behrendt, Vlemminck told of going to the hospital and being handed the baby he believed had been born to his unmarried daughter. The elderly Belgian declared the baby died as he was taking the infant away.

Throws Babe Into River.
"I took the baby's clothes off and wrapped him in my own coat" Sheriff Behrendt quoted Vlemminck as saying. "I drove for blocks and blocks, afraid to go home.

"Finally I made up my mind to get rid of it, but I didn't know how. When I looked at the baby and found it was dead I threw my coat, the baby and all, into the river."

It was not until two days later, when police took him to the hospital, he said, that he learned the baby was not his daughter's.

Earlier Vlemminck had given a somewhat different version of how he disposed of the baby. He said then that he paid an unnamed man $25 to get rid of the infant.

Greatrex discovered the substitution of babies when he returned to the hospital from his wife's funeral and was handed an infant wearing a tag with the name "Vlemminck" on it. He refused to accept the child and it was given to a charitable organization. Greatrex sued the hospital for $200,000, but lost the case.

EXCHANGE OF PLOTS ASKED BY ANDERSON

ing several weeks ago, was protested immediately after its adoption Monday night by G. N. Hesgard, contractor, who said the figure was two and a half times the state license, and would prevent him from doing any plumbing in the city. Councilmen said they had been requested to pass the ordinance, which is modelled after that of Hood River.

A second ordinance was adopted empowering the council to declare a nuisance any cesspool, barn or privy which offends the senses or endangers public welfare, the nuisance to be abated within 24 hours following notification by the marshal.

A bill for $21.52 from the forest service for assistance in fighting the sawdust pile fire here two weeks ago will be forwarded to Schnitzer & Wolf of Portland, owners of the old mill site, councilmen said. In presenting their bill the foresters said the next time they gave such assistance they would include a bill for C.C.C. labor, which amounted to $81 in this instance.

Councilman Merrill said he would make arrangements for placing of boomsticks extending into the Columbia from the beach near the old mill site, where swimming lessons provided by the Hood River county swim committee will be given the last week of this month. Merrill said Karl Rosenback, owner of the barge moored near the beach, had consented to use of the site.

John Martinsen, who protested to the council that insufficient provision for fire protection had been made in laying out the new water system near his home, was told it was probable he could tie an inch and-a-half pipe into the main along the highway, and place a small hydrant near his house. The council will check with the contractor and the engineer on the plan.

There was strong sentiment following the Civil war for treating the southern states as conquered provinces, and giving them no vote whatever in their government.

Many persons complain they are not artists because they "cannot draw a straight line," which as a matter of fact is an extremely difficult feat even for a trained artist.
