MR. GILL

By STANLEY CORDELL

WNU Service.

AT FIRST Mr. Otis Gill had seemed to take a liking to young Actor Forbes. But he changed his opinion when the Champion began to buck the choppy seat of the open Atlantic. She was not a large liner, and the waves were running high. Arthur Forbes turned away suddenly and clutching the deck rail for support, shaped an unsteady course for the companionway.

Mr. Gill burst into guffaws of laughter.

And from that point forward until dinner time, Mr. Otis Gill proceeded to make himself obnoxious to as many passengers as would listen to him. He went from one group to another, snickering whenever he found a man or woman bearing the telltale pallor in their cheeks, boasting of his own immunity to the well-known malady.

By 5 o'clock the seas had increased to almost mountainous proportions. Mr. Gill rolled about the deck with a broad grin on his face, seeming to take a particular delight in recalling various banquets he had attended during the preceding winter.

The dining salon was located beneath the forward deck; Mr. Gill's table was at the extreme end, near that section where the vessel's bow began to narrow. He had hardly seated himself, when he saw that young Arthur Forbes was placed two tables away and slightly behind. There was a plate of food on the table before the youth, but it was untouched. Like one in a trance Mr. Forbes was sitting with eyes widened greatly beyond their normal size, cheeks as pale as death.

Mr. Gill roared with laughter, looking about him and nodding toward the unfortunate Mr. Forbes' direction.

After a time Mr. Gill saw that the youth at the other table was staring toward a port-hole, and his grin broadened. The port-hole was located far forward, and with each dip of the vessel one could see the entire slope of a wave, from trough to crest.

After a while Mr. Gill found it was easier to stare straight ahead than to sit half-turned in his chair in order to watch young Forbes, who, after all, wasn't the most pleasing sight in the world. And in staring straight ahead Mr. Gill found that he was looking directly through the port-hole at the swishing seas.

He watched idly for a few moments and then looked away, conscious of a feeling in his stomach not wholly normal. The sensation passed and he looked again at the port-hole, feeling more comfortable in this position. Instantly the same strange sensation attacked him again. Annoyed, Mr. Gill looked about on a pretext of locating his waiter. To his amazement the dining salon and the people in it were rolling up and down with a movement not unlike the rolling seas.

Mr. Gill was sober now; his face pale; his eyes glassy. Realization of what was happening to him came as a shock. He was seasick! Helplessly, miserably ill. Never in his life could Mr. Gill remember feeling so utterly at the mercy of anything.

With a mighty effort he stood up, clutching at the table. He hesitated a moment then started for the door, reeling, gripping chairbacks for support, one hand holding his mouth. Dimly he knew that people were looking up at him and smiling, winking knowingly to each other. He felt enraged and humiliated and indignant.

Miraculously Mr. Gill reached the doorway and disappeared up the stairs. Instantly the dining salon was a bedlam of laughter. Up toward the bow young Arthur Forbes was wiping some white substance from his cheeks and grinning broadly. Several men came over and spoke to him. A steward came up beaming.

"I'll change your order, sir. Bring you some hot food."

Mr. Forbes smiled. "Thanks, And say, steward, that was a smart idea of yours—asking me to play the role of the helplessly seasick passenger and placing Gill at that table directly opposite the porthole."

The steward nodded, eyes a-twinkle. "We have a man like Mr. Gill on board every voyage, Sir. And we have that table placed there for just his type. No one else is asked to sit so far forward."

Why Buddha Is Known by Several Different Names

Buddha's name was Guatama—Prince Gautama, son of the king of Maghada and a member of the family or tribe of Sakya. The rest of his several names are titles reverently bestowed upon him by his followers, or given to represent him in his various aspects, according to a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He is Sakya Muni, which is "Sakya the sage," or Sakya Sinha, which is "Sakya the lion." He is Buddha or Boodha, "the wise one" or "the enlightened;" to the Chinese he is Fo and to the Japanese, Boodso, titles of the same significance. And the title Siddharta or Sarvartha-siddha means "the fulfillment of every wish." There are many other names for him, all conveying the idea of his greatness, wisdom and perfection.

POULTRY

FALL HATCHING IS ON THE INCREASE

Poultrymen Plan Uniform Egg Production.

By G. T. Klein, Extension Poultry Specialist, Massachusetts State College.
WNU Service.

The number of pullets purchased this fall to produce eggs for fall hatching will probably exceed that of most recent years. Fall hatching is definitely on the increase as poultrymen continue with their plan of bringing about uniform egg production throughout the year.

Studies made by extension services have shown that the consumer pays 13.6 cents more a dozen for eggs from July 1 to December 1 than he does during the winter and spring months, mainly because the majority of chicks are hatched in March and April and come into production after December. Poultrymen now plan to hatch chicks in odd lots over the year and have eggs at reasonable prices any time the consumer wants them.

Late fall is the best time for hatching, and the brood should not number more than 25 per cent of the total flock. Records of poultrymen show that Rhode Island Reds hatched on October 15 will be laying 50 per cent in April; will go to 65 or 75 per cent in May, June, July, and August, and with some culling will hold 50 per cent production in September and October.

These pullets can replace birds culled from the laying pens next summer and will give their heaviest production during the months that the average bird takes a vacation from egg-laying.

Fall hatched birds have a tendency to lay smaller eggs and their brooding costs run slightly higher, but poultrymen are finding them profitable and the practice of fall hatching is on the increase.

Avoid Crowding Pullets, Poultry Expert's Advice

Costs of raising pullets may be reduced if attention is given to the problem of providing adequate brooding space as the chicks increase in size, says C. E. Rohde, of the Missouri College of Agriculture. Chicks that become crowded cost more to develop, as they grow more slowly.

It is important to market cockerels as broilers at the earliest possible time, in order to provide additional room for the growing pullets. Even when sufficient brooding units make it practical to release the cockerels, it is desirable to separate them from the pullets as soon as the sexes can be determined. Cockerels grow more rapidly and tend to crowd pullets from the feeders.

Separation of the sexes will result in better and more uniform pullet development. It will also enable producers to push the cockerels for an earlier market. This may be accomplished by using all-night lights to lengthen the rearing period for the market birds. Dim, all-night lighting may be done with kerosene or other types of lanterns, as well as with low-watt electric lights.

Cull Defective Chicks

Cull sickly, unthrifty, slow maturing, undersized chicks and pullets as soon as observed, advises an expert in the Ohio Experiment Station Bimonthly Bulletin. Such count of their being infected birds are generally culled because of an inherent weakness or on account of their being infected with disease or infested with parasites, either of which may be transmitted to the balance of the flock. Hence, all such birds should be culled and disposed of as soon as possible.
