The fellow who got that job away from you yesterday is a low-down, chiseling so and so and he cut the price to the bone to get it. When you got that job away from him last month it was superior salesmanship. —Charles McIntyre in the Pacific Printer and Publisher.

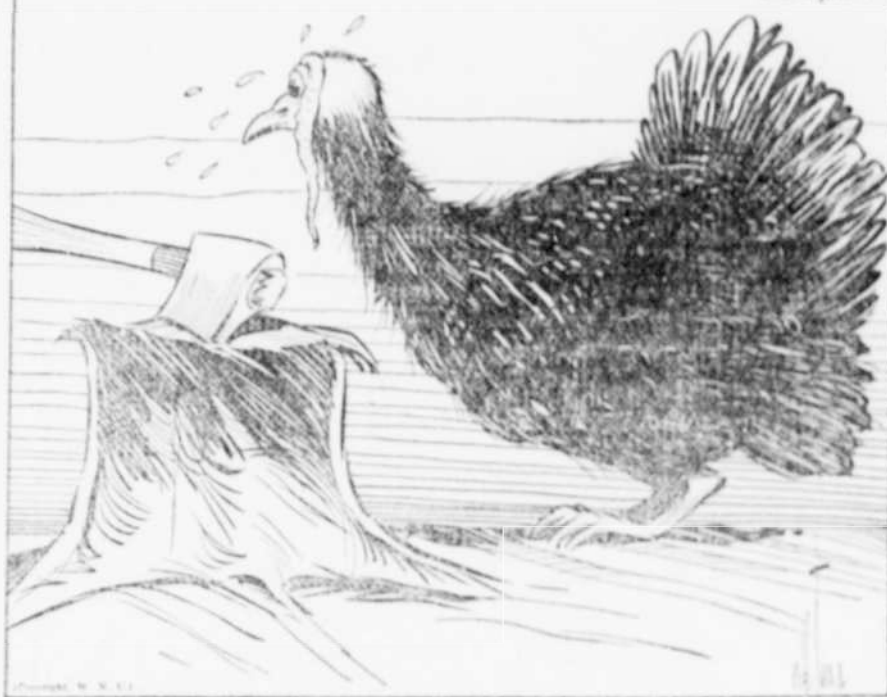

The University of Oregon School of Architecture and Allied Arts is the outstanding school of its kind in the country, according to Grant LaFarge, prominent New York architect. Mr. LaFarge visited the campus recently, as representative of the American Institute of Architects.

How many readers ever pay any attention to the argument of a public speaker?—Shelby County (Mo.) Herald.

The Hound Family

The hound family includes so many varieties that it is often divided into two groups: the coursing dogs and the scenting dogs. The Beagle's specialty is rabbits. The large nostrils and deep loose lips serve to great advantage in picking up the trail and the breed is famous for its tenacity in holding to the line. Once catching the scent, pleasure and success are signaled by filling the air with bell-like barks. And this vocal music places him at the top as the best singer in canine circles.—Los Angeles Times.
