tion on the Columbia, leaving design, location and priority of the dams to the corps of engineers.

At the afternoon session John Lewis, Portland engineer, described at length the technical aspects of engineering projects on the Columbia, and Mr. Dobbs of Hermiston, representing the Inland Waterways association, spoke against a dam at The Dalles but favored a similar project at Umatilla.

Opposition to the program of development was expected to come from down-river salmon interests, who had representatives at the meeting, and possibly from some of the power companies, although the navigational aspects of the dam at The Dalles were the subject of most of the talks.
