YULETIDE DAYS

Christmas is more than a holiday, more than a season, more than an occasion for good will; it is an atmosphere. There is no time of year when an annual occasion or series of occasions reaches into every niche and corner of daily living. Christmas is in the home, in the church, in the schools, in the social gatherings, in the clubs, in business.

Folks scurry about in a little greater hurry, with more good nature, with more buoyancy. The scenes we see on faces of Christmas shoppers, the expectancy, the exhilaration, are lacking on the countenances of the buyers before the opening of school in the fall or on the physiognomy of the thrifty buyer at January Clearance sales. Street decorations and window displays portray Christmas, as do the wreaths and electric candles in windows of homes. It is the busiest time of year, yet more folks attend various gatherings than at any other time.

One would think Christmas would be a burden to mothers preparing for re-unions, to sales persons whose patience would be taxed on other occasions with the indefiniteness and lack of courtesy of the occasional over-zealous shopper, to the overloaded mail carrier, to the community worker who is helping to prepare three Christmas programs.

But surprisingly, few of these folks complain, except at the let-down after the great occasion has passed.

A season of decorations, a season of festivity, of generosity, of good wishes, of better business—a season of family re-unions a season of expectation for the young, of satisfaction for the old—a season of activity, of finer appreciations—a season of song! Let us carry something of its spirit until another Christmas when once again we will be buoyed up with the emotion of the year's most fully observed holiday—the Christmas spirit.

The Chinese rebellion is back in the news, and again we must intersperse our reading of the papers with prudent polysyllabic sneezes.
