CASCADE LOCKS SCHOOL

The first grade had a Christmas party on Monday. They played games and exchanged gifts.

The second grade is enjoying its three gold fish which they received as a prize during the P.T.A. membership drive.

Monday afternoon our room exchanged gifts. Even though Christmas is past there was just as much thrill as ever in receiving and giving.

The second grade is very happy to have such a nice looking school room, and so quiet. Teacher likes it too.

Wednesday morning all our plants were frozen. Even the gold fish were soundly asleep in ice.

Cecil Kelsey gave the room a bowl of gold fish for a Christmas present. The children enjoy watching the fish and caring for them.

The third and fourth grades had a party January 5.

Health prizes were awarded Jean Powell in the third grade and Jerry Miller in the fourth grade.

Horse History

Before America was discovered in 1492 there were no horses here, either in North or South America. Yet the early frontiersmen found the western plains fairly alive with droves of wild horses, in places almost rivaling the buffalo in numbers. Cortez brought the first horses to America in 1519. In 1540, Coronado explored North America as far north as Kansas with a band of 240 mounted men. Some of the horses were lost and the wild horses of the American West came from that start. In 1537, five Spanish stallions and seven mares were released in South America. Their offspring were scattered the length of the South American continent within 50 years.

A typical husband is one who thinks other men are petted too much by their wives while he gets too little attention.

QUICK COOKING HELPS IN WINTER VEGETABLE USES

Modern production, shipping and storage methods have given the homemaker attractive fresh vegetables the year around, but even so the list of those available in winter is not as complete as at other times of the year.

One way to keep the family from becoming tired of the winter vegetables is to see that they are prepared in the most attractive as well as the most wholesome form. The most important rule for cooking of all vegetables is to use the shortest time possible for the process, says Lucy A. Case, nutrition specialist in the Oregon extension service.

Quick cooking preserves both an attractive appearance and full food value, while enhancing the flavor. Not all vegetables can be prepared alike, however, Miss Case points out. Following are some suggestions for preparing three common winter vegetables:

Brussels Sprouts: Wash and trim. Cook in more than enough boiling water to cover, salted at rate of 1½ teaspoons of salt to quart of water. Cook rapidly about 10 minutes or until tender when tested with fork. Drain off all water, and season with hot cream or medium white sauce, poured over the sprouts so as not to break their shape.

Broccoli: Remove all but tender inside leaves and wash and separate flowers or sections. Cook and season same as described for Brussels sprouts. Broccoli is attractive cooked whole and served with white sauce covering part of the head and decorated with paprika on the white sauce. Broken or separated broccoli is usually cooked in about 12 minutes, but the leaves are sometimes given a longer cooking and used as greens.

Winter Squash: Wash and split into sections of size for serving and remove fibers and seeds. Bake in moderate oven until tender, about 1 hour. Fifteen minutes before done add salt, butter and brown sugar or honey. Serve on the shell. The pieces may also be baked or steamed, removed from the shell and mashed and seasoned with cream or butter and salt, or squash may be steamed or baked and used in pies instead of pumpkin.

According to the Federal Bureau of Statistics, the value of fur-bearing animals on farms in this province in 1934 was $490,282. The fox is the most popular animal on the fur farm, more than 9,000 being raised in 1934.
