

Tragedy of Marriage

"Emotion tests of both sexes show that men have more egotistical emotion and less love in their personality make-up than women," says William Moulton Marston, psychologist, discussing marriage in Good Housekeeping.

"Loss of a career may mean little to the average woman if her love nature is satisfactorily adjusted," he goes on, "but rarely will love take the place of success in a man's life even though the winning of a woman's praise may be the purpose underlying his search for fame. It is one of the tragedies of this artificial division of sexes that men waste their time seeking triumphs to please women, while women care far more for the men themselves than for their triumphs."

Don't Irritate Gas Bloating

If you want to really GET RID OF GAS and terrible bloating, don't expect to do it by just doctoring your stomach with harsh, irritating alkalies and "gas tablets." "WHO is she?"

"Huh? Oh—Myrtle Foster. Nice girl."

"I'll say she is. I don't think I met her."

"No? I'll introduce you. Came here alone, too."

Phil Roberts found himself staring, but it was so good to stare at her that he didn't stop. She sat across the table half-hidden by the big flower center-piece, and through it her hazel eyes gleamed like jewels. She was all chestnut and mellow wine colors in that dress and with that hair.

He sought an introduction in a hurry.

"Al's parties are always elaborate but sometimes a little dull. I thought it would be duller than ever for me because I had to come alone—but it's not any more."

She looked pleased and, while she didn't say it, she was thinking the same thing. She had been watching him as he talked. She liked his even teeth and his broad mouth with the quirk in the corners. His hair was almost the color of hers, with a clean shine in it. And such a pleasant manner—

"Oh-ho," said someone behind her, "we'll have to put a stop to this."

They looked away from each other for the first time to find everyone looking at them and Al holding a watch. "Ten minutes in one corner is long enough for people who have just been introduced. Come on—circulate!"

He couldn't say more than a few words to her until the party broke up. As he held her coat. "It's over much too soon."

She nodded.

"But you'll let me take you home, won't you? My car's right outside."

"So is mine. I guess I'll have to go home with myself. Tonight, anyway," she added, and his heart jumped at the way she said it.

"But maybe it won't start," she continued. "Better wait till I see. I had a little accident on the way here."

"Too bad. Much broken?"

"She's been stuttering ever since." Her face clouded. "An absolute nitwit in a big coupe dashed ahead of the light. You know how icy the streets are today. Well, my brakes held, but the wheels didn't. I spoiled his right running board and he mashed my lights and punctured my radiator. I was sorry at first, but he was so nasty—talked about woman drivers and said I should have my eyes looked after—that I told him I was sorry I hadn't put on full speed and knocked the stuffing out of him."

Roberts felt a cold chill come over him. He drew himself up. "The light, my dear madam, was green on my side for a full ten seconds before I entered the intersection."

Myrtle looked at him, startled. She had heard that sentence and that tone of voice once before. The same cold chill fell upon her: "It was you!"

They stood and glared at each other. Then she turned and marched straight out, and he gathered up his coat and hat and left with a look so furious that everyone moved out of his way.

Then one day he saw her again. She was driving that roadster just ahead of him. His heart jumped, then settled down to pounding. He followed her without thinking—without knowing why. As they drove, he could see her face reflected in the rear-view mirror of her car—glory of perfect skin, pert nose, sweet lips, wisps of that chestnut hair.

Her eyes were looking at him—Looking at the reflection of his own face in the mirror as it came to her from behind! And so their eyes met and held each other, separated by fifteen feet and each looking into the same tiny glass that held for the moment all the world.

The two cars moved down the street. There was a traffic light on a pole in the middle of the street. The light showed red. A policeman shouted.

Her car went right on and knocked the pole with a great crash. He couldn't stop. He rammed into the back of her car. Then he could only crawl out and go to her where she stood shakily by her ruined roadster.

"I'm sorry—terribly sorry. It was all my fault."

"No, no. I should have seen the light. I was ahead..."

They both stopped and smiled at each other.

"You were staring."

"Yes, so were you."

He held her hand, and they faced the purple policeman so calmly and so much together that he could only gape at them.

California Colt Views World

This California colt, only twelve hours old, takes his first look at the big world. He was the first foal of the year at Rancho San Luis Rey, famed Southern California breeding farm, and is a brother to the well known thoroughbred Alexander Pantages. It will be two years before this young hopeful is given a name and sent to the starting gate.

Household Questions

A tablespoonful of vinegar will soften glue that has become hardened in a bottle.

A pinch of alum added to the water when washing blue or green articles of clothing will prevent the colors from running.

Never fasten suspenders below the reinforced hems of stockings. Wash stockings with lukewarm lather and squeeze out gently—they'll ladder if they are wrung.

Don't use any kind of artificial heat for drying stockings. Hang by the toes in an airy place to dry and don't fold away damp.

The stock left from cooked spinach makes a valuable addition to vegetable soup.

Two or three slices of bacon placed on top of a liver loaf during baking adds to the flavor.
