IS THERE SOMETHING TO HIDE?

The Hood River county school system is a unique institution. The members of the board keep very quiet about their activities until they wish money, then they try to tell us everything at once. They ask the newspapers to support the raising of money but they cannot see the sense in publishing the county school budget and letting the people as a whole read and study it. Few people will take the time to stand outside of a school house to study a budget notice.

Perhaps this is the reason there here is so much talk about the County Unit System. The general public is not kept well enough informed of the activities.

IT MIGHT WORK

A New Jersey legislator favors a stamp or label on every article sold to let the purchaser know how much of the price of it consists of taxes. The idea is not new, but it might work, if the politicians will ever consent to the disclosure to consumers of the extent to which the latter are soaked by indirect taxes. And yet, until consumers are made vividly aware that they are paying taxes from the time they get out of bed in the morning until they get into it again at night, they will not raise a loud enough howl for their various state governments to listen to them. The cost of government, the waste of public money, will never come down until some way has been discovered to open the eyes of the tax-paying public to the size of the tax load which it is allowing its taxing bodies to impose upon it.

A Northwest Legend

Those who have read the enticing story of "The Bridge of the Gods" will recall warfare carried on by groups on opposite sides of the Columbia. We know that war-like tendencies in modern civilization are futile and that progress can only be brought about through co-operation.

The present

Bridge of the Gods

Is a span which brings persons, communities, and two states closer together. Through easy travel across a river that for centuries had been a barrier, peoples have come to know each other better. A marked fellowship exists between Washington and Oregon folks of the Mid-Columbia and they are working together.
