IN THE AUTUMN

"... And don't spend that nickel for candy."

Trucks rumble through dusty rows of heavily-laden trees, filled to the top with lug boxes of large firm pears. Scores of trucks, thousands of boxes, millions of pears. And soon there will be apples. High schools will close their doors so that the young people can help with the harvest. Everybody helps.

"... Take care of your new pants. Don't fall in the mud, and don't climb any fences."

Lots of people think that spring is the nicest time of year, while others like summer. But we prefer the autumn. We also prefer people who prefer the autumn, for there's just something about them. It might be a good idea for form a society of autumn-lovers, such as the Association for People Who Prefer Autumn Best. Or, for short, the A. F. P. W. A. B. Just think of the dues it would bring in.

"... Be sure to bring your books home."

What do we like about autumn? Well, there's the crisp, invigorating air, the haze of early evening, a touch of white frost in the morning, the many-colored leaves. Pumpkins, apple cider, turkey. The thumping sound of a football as it leaves a player's toe. The moon, like a great golden pumpkin itself, rising over the hills. A cheerful blaze in the fireplace. And lots of other things.

"... And don't get in any rough games. Now you can go—but wait! Come here and let me get at those ears. Goodness alive!"
