BUNTING—PORT—WATER SYSTEM

One would think that after a time the business people of Cascade Locks would get wise to schemes that pop up on the spur of the moment and that must be settled right now or it will be too late, particularly when they are sponsored by William Keeler or J. B. Laber.

The last time it was the street decorations in Cascade Locks in honor of the 15 seconds that it took the president to pass through town. (Hood River was more fortunate; it took him longer to go through because there is a curve in the center of town.)

One hundred dollars or thereabouts was collected from the townspeople of Cascade Locks for the rental of the bunting used in the decorations.

The time before this it was the appointment of John H. Lewis as port manager-engineer. Keeler insisted that the hiring had to be done that night; tomorrow would be too late. He assured the commissioners that Mr. Labor had known Lewis for 30 years and Labor said he was the man for the job. Keeler had the contract all typed out. He said that he and Lewis had typed it out that afternoon. The commissioners were on a spot. As Keeler presented the situation, it was a matter of life or death. (Can't remember whose life or whose death.) Hesgard and Carlson had heard Bill run wild, and said "No." The procedure was new to Rosenback and Chapman and they really thought that Bill was sincere and that there was a necessity for speed. They voted "yes."

A couple of years ago the first city council of the city of Cascade Locks was elected. They had not even had their first meeting when Laber called them into conference about the wonderful water system that they should start working on immediately. Time was an element—they could not take time to think it over. They must act right now. The councilmen not wishing to deprive the city of a wonderful water system due to their slowness of action, "went for" the idea.

Let us look before we leap, so we won't cry afterwards. And also let us not judge too harshly the person that will not leap; he may have more time for thinking than we have.

WHAT ABOUT OUR DAM?

Nearly all of the residents of the Bonneville Dam area flocked to the reservation last Tuesday morning to hear President Roosevelt tell them what he was going to do with the Bonneville Dam.

Tuesday noon they flocked home, still wondering what he was going to do with the Bonneville Dam. The speech could be interpreted in many ways, according to the political affiliations of the hearer or reader.

With direct reference to his power policy, Roosevelt stated that he wished the power to go to the "widest use" and that he was opposed to industrial concentration at the dam itself. This breath-taking stand was applauded in many quarters and in Thursdays papers all of the politicians of the Northwest approved his stand. No one since the dam was started has ever opposed the policy of the power being used to benefit the greatest number of people. It has just been a question of how to handle the power to accomplish this end and that question still remains unanswered.

Roosevelt's remarks concerning industrial concentration at the switch-board might be interpreted as a slap at Portland's efforts. Or on the other hand, he might have had reference to a "Pittsburgh of the west" springing up at Bonneville. This seems rather out of the question since there is so little room at Bonneville and directly adjacent territory.

The biggest hand of the day was received when he stated that more dams are to be built on the Columbia, but he did not state what he is going to do with the Bonneville Dam.

It was nice to hear that he "expected" to have the budget balanced by July, 1938, and it was nice to hear that after six years of more or less hit or miss spending, he is recommending establishment of regional planning boards so that in the future such costly errors as the proposed harnessing of the tide in Maine and the Florida Canal will not occur, but we did not hear what he is going to do with the Bonneville Dam.

It used to be that they would sit out in the evening and gas on the steps, but today they spend the evening stepping on the gas.

Right after the vacation season a lot of fellows are just like the moon gets sometimes — down to their last quarter.

Time have changed a lot. In the old days a woman's first object in life was to find a man. Now it's the only one.

In early days, an Indian painted his face and set out to win a squaw, but nowadays it's the other way around.

Maybe a man would also spend an entire afternoon buying a hat if he merely wanted other men to see it.
