Big Tea Party Features

Annual Prayer Festival

The world's biggest tea party is that which takes place at the annual Tibetan prayer festival.

A huge bronze cauldron is rigged up in the main square of Lhasa, capital of Tibet, and the tea is prepared.

It is made by churning up brick tea, soda, salt, and plenty of butter or old mutton fat. The older the butter the better!

The result of the mixing is a dark brown oily liquid, and Tibetans regard it as the greatest drink in existence. It is quite an ordinary thing for a man or woman to drink about 60 cups of it in a day, asserts a writer in Pearson's London Weekly.

And the extraordinary thing is that it seems to do them good. Tibetans are endowed with almost incredible muscular strength and amazing powers of endurance.

Causes of Electrical Storms

Electrical storms begin on hot, still days. The heated earth warms the air next to it, which becomes charged with water vapor by evaporation. The absence of wind tends to keep this warm air from mixing with the cooler air above it. As a result a considerable amount of warm air accumulates next to the ground, although it has expanded with heat and is therefore lighter than the air above.

Mummy of King Tut

The mummy of Tutankhamen was inclosed within three ornamented coffins, placed one within the other, the innermost of solid gold, decorated with remarkable workmanship. The mummy was covered with objects of personal adornment of great value and wore on the face a mask of gold, golden sandals on the feet and golden tips on the toes and fingers.
