THE TIME HAS COME

Through the past three years the Chronicle has taken exception at various times to proposals and actions of our fellow citizens of Cascade Locks in the line of planning and building properties for Cascade Locks before we knew where the future of Cascade Locks lay. Sometimes these issues were stressed to the extreme and personalities entered in.

Monday afternoon we sat in on the closed conference with J. D. Ross and his financial advisor, Isaac Comeaux. Later we spent two hours at dinner with them. Recently we have spent considerable time with the Portland Chamber of Commerce officials and other interested parties. As a result of these conferences the Chronicle feels that the time has arrived for the citizens of Cascade Locks to present a united front.

The Chronicle feels that problems that are shortly to come before our community are far too great to be jeopardized by petty, local differences in opinions and personalities.

Let us all get around one table, listen and consider the other fellow's point of view a little bit more than we have in the past, cut out these back alley politics and show the world that Cascade Locks is ready.

LEGION CHRISTMAS PARTY

A letter from Ed Clark of the American Legion tells us of the final plans for the Fourth Annual American Legion Christmas party to be held at the Bonneville Civic Auditorium on Wednesday, Dec. 22.

In the fall of 1934 about this time of the year, Ed dropped in to our little print shop on the hill in Cascade Locks and asked for our cooperation in the putting on of a huge Christmas party for the children of the dam area. That enterprise was the beginning of one of the pleasantest annual occasions that has occurred in the dam area and it will continue as such for years to come.

To you, Ed, and your helpers, we send you our greetings and best wishes to the fourth annual American Legion Christmas party. More power to an organization that can create and maintain such an annual institution as the Christmas party.

EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS

America is beginning to realize that the unemployment problem is America's business—not just the business of the county, the state and the federal government.

Reports have come from an American Legion meeting in the state of Washington, that this group is making a study and is advancing a plan of limiting the number of breadwinners per family and advocating other programs to relieve the present distress. The Council for Social Action of the Congregational Church recently held a meeting for this district at The Dalles, attended by Hood River men, where this group's program was outlined, and included in it were plans for a study of the unemployment problem.

It seems that groups which exist for civic betterment, are including in their programs unemployment as a worthwhile project. It is a

THE SONGS OF CHRISTMASTIDE

The Christmastide is one of song,
Its notes ring everywhere;
They echo in the stately church;
Are broadcast on the air;
The carolers upon our streets
Sing out the story fair;
The little children's hymn of cheer
Drives from us worldly care.
'Tis "Silent Night" at Christmastide;
The "Noel" rings out clear,
"Come All Ye Faithful" bids mankind
To put away his fear;
We hear the "Herald Angels" song
Of peace, good will found here,
And all that Christmas hymnody
That tells man joy is near.

—J. Kelly Buck

good omen. The "let George do it" attitude has prevailed too much in the past, and the government has borne the brunt of the responsibility. It is to be hoped that the idea spreads to other circles, for the sooner unemployment problems become the interest of American people as a whole, the sooner the solutions will come about.

It is a broad subject, involving more than the usual number of wherefroms, whereas, wherefors and wheretos. Schools of thought on the topic are at variance. One group maintains labor-saving machinery obviously decreases employment, while the modernists claim it adds to employment, for men must build the labor-saving machines, production is increased, etc. Involved in the subject is also length of working hours, distribution of wealth, business cycles, ages of retirement, trends of population, vocational education and rehabilitation, and the self-respect of the man who loses his job.

It is a social as well as an economic subject, and it appears that civic groups, composed of men and women of integrity, sincerity and intelligence, can do much to solve the problem which has become paramount in modern civilization.

When the family finally persuades Dad to have his picture made he only hopes that it won't look any funnier than is absolutely necessary.

The difference between gossip and downright scandal is whether you tell it to someone or someone tells it to you.
