

Bulletin Tells of Captain Bonneville

In his second bulletin on the "Bonneville Project," Administrator J. D. Ross gives the background of the big dam's namesake. The bulletin comprises a biographical sketch of Captain Benjamin Louis Eulalie de Bonneville, an account similar to the one published in The Chronicle several weeks ago.

In speaking of the early explorer, the bulletin remarks: "Few persons are acquainted with the historic westward trek of the explorer whose name is now commemorated by a 600,000 horsepower monument of steel and concrete at Bradford Island. Four years ago only a little hamlet on the railroad line and a few scattered landmarks recalled his name, but today thousands of tourists motor up the Columbia Gorge to visit the mile-long dam that stretches between the granite cliffs, a permanent reminder of the exploits of Captain Bonneville."

Careful Tree Cutting Urged

According to information received this week by The Chronicle from the U. S. Forest Service, it is pointed out that annual Christmas tree cutting will not seriously affect the forest growths providing trees are cut in such a manner as not to cripple the continuous tree production of the land on which they grow.
