ministrators who were recently questioned on safety features of modern automobiles were unanimous in stating that automobiles at present have plenty of speed. Twenty-seven out of the 42 believed that there is too much power under the hoods of most cars. While they did not make any specific recommendations about control of the power factor, their comments indicate that reserve power in the motor should be used very prudently by the driver.

The community safety council in Ashland, Oregon, recently declared war on jaywalkers, speeding through school zones and carelessness with bicycles. Secretary of State Earl Snell warmly endorsed the principle of concentration on a few of the more prevalent violations, rather than scattering efforts over too wide a range of activities.

Students in Glassboro, N. J., grade school receive pedestrian licenses which are punched for pedestrian traffic violations and revoked following two punches. To date the students have observed the rules so closely that no licenses have been punched.
