CONSOLATION FOR THE DEFEATED

The post-election spirits of the defeated candidate should not be so low as his "Life is real, life is earnest" expression denotes, as he walks around among his fellow men who failed to nominate him. He can take refuge in his choice of two schools of thought.

One of these philosophies is based on the theory that a man votes for the candidate most like himself. So if the candidate feels resentful toward the majority of mankind, he can delight in the thought that he must not be like them.

The other trend of premises on which unsuccessful candidates' consolations can be based goes something like this: Only half of the people in the county were registered. Less than half of those registered voted. Half of those who voted didn't belong to his party (for Republicans and Democrats are about equal in this county), and couldn't vote for him. Perhaps a portion who voted against him knew neither himself nor his opponent, but marked the X in a hit-and-miss fashion. Then there were possibly more voters who marked their ballots for his opponent who regret it by this time.

Then the defeated candidate might remind himself that perhaps the political plums across the fence are not so sweet after all, and his defeat at the polls may have been a blessing in disguise.

THE SYMBOLIC POPPY

No finer humanitarian act, no easier way of expressing appreciation could be made than by merely purchasing one of the crepe paper poppies, which are sold just prior to Memorial Day, known throughout the English-speaking world as the memorial flower of the war dead. Each poppy carries, attached to the stem, the official Legion and Auxiliary label, identifying it as an authentic veteran-made poppy, distributed for the sole benefit of the war's living victims.

The cause of these veterans, lying practically helpless in the hospitals, largely forgotten by the people for whom they fought and made their sacrifices, makes no demands for generous subscriptions. All these worthy and suffering men ask is one dime, and what they give in return value received is an emblem which not only lends materialistic adornment, but is a symbol showing that we possess some consciousness of the sacrifice made by those doomed to a living death in veterans' hospitals.

FOLLY OF THE "WRITE-IN"

Many voters of Hood River County, who last Friday "wrote in" candidates of the party opposite their own, probably realized the next day that in so doing, theirs was either an act of folly or the following of poor advice. For unless the write-in candidate received a plurality over those on the ballot, the write-in vote counts for naught. The vote is wasted, and the ballot caster might as well not have voted at all for that office.

Newspapers which instructed and encouraged voters in the matter of write-ins have been the object of some criticism of late, particularly when such write-ins pertained to offices for which regular candidates appeared on the ballots.

If the voter wants to throw away his vote, that is his business, but he might next time stop to consider those who count ballot markings in the wee small hours and who wrestle with nearly as many write-ins as names of candidates.

JUDGE NOT BY THE YARD

We would take issue with the person who concludes that the appearance of a man's front yard, and back yard, too, is a means of judging his personality. Lawns, shrubs, plants and hedges may be cultivated and trimmed to perfection, yet the owner of the property can be a man careless in his personal appearance, who throws cigar stubs on the lawn. The artistic appearance of his yard may be due to the efforts and tastes of his hired gardener.

Nor can we compare the yard of a man who spends his early mornings and his evenings grubbing dandelions and clipping hedges with the place of the man next door who is in business for himself and works in store or shop from dawn to dusk.

The man whose yard is as littered as a newspaper editor's desk may be a finicky, systematic, and meticulous individual whose premises "get that way" merely because he is an otherwise human sort of fellow who possesses three youngsters and a dog who are allowed to frolic at will on his grounds.

Then the fine-appearing place of the man who is of too-moderate means to hire his grass cut cannot be taken as a means of judging his temperament. Perhaps the front yard reflects the personality and industry of his wife.

QUICKSILVER DISCOVERED
The Bonanza quicksilver mine operated by H. C. Wilmot east of Eutherlin bids fair to develop into the realization of its name. Some high grade bodies of ore have been struck and the output of "quick" for the past several days has been from five to seven flasks daily, which is almost double the returns of the average runs.
The increase is due solely to better ore, as the same amount of ore was processed in the operations.
