Would Keep Beauty of Highways

Oregon's wide-famed highways that thread through majestic mountains and along fertile valleys from California, up through Ashland, Medford, Grants Pass, Roseburg, Eugene, Albany, Salem, to Portland, and adjoining roads that lead to Crater Lake, Mt. Hood, up the Santiam and McKenzie rivers and to other areas in the Cascade Mountain regions, must be guarded vigilantly by citizens of this part of Oregon to insure their permanent scenic beauty and steps should be taken at once to preserve timber strips along its route, and to take over and improve burned and cut-over sections, it is pointed out in a report of the state planning board, "Preservation of Oregon Roadside Timber."

The report, which presents facts and figures, for all highways of the State, shows that a grand total of 590.5 miles of heavy travel highways in the Cascade system, 250.4 miles are through majestic merchantable timber, 119 miles are bordered by non-merchantable timber, 122.7 miles are sided by second growth, cut-over and burned areas, and 98.4 miles are in non-forest regions.

To insure preservation of a substantial strip of permanent natural forest cover along these heavy travel highways would require a combined investment on the part of the national forest, state and O. & C. lands of $1,171,660, of which the state should contribute $225,110, the national forest, $523,670, and the O. & C. exchange, $422,880. Because of the great scenic value of this route, the sums would be an investment of outstanding value to the state, the report points out.

The heavy travelled roads in the Cascade system included in the survey are the Pacific, Mt. Hood Loop, Wapinitia, North Santiam, Santiam, McKenzie, Willamette, Crater Lake, Tiller Trail, Diamond Lake and Green Springs.

The report, which is the work of the planning board's committee on roadside preservation aided by a special WPA project, points out the grave and immediate dangers to timber borders due to truck logging, need of liquidation by owners, and other factors, and urges that agencies, organizations and citizens unite to make permanent the present uncut areas, and to improve those already cut-over or burned.

600,000 rainbow trout eggs, and they have already hatched into young and hungry fish. The hatchery has a total capacity of 3,000,000 fish.

While the only thing that they try to hatch there is fish, the hatchery is getting quite a name as the home of other kinds of wild life. The hatchery has holding pens on its grounds, and yesterday a shipment of Pheasants, hatched in Pendleton, was received. The pheasants will be held all fall and winter, and will be released in this vicinity this spring.

When the pens are empty, green grasses and grains are grown in them, and the pheasants feed on green feed while they are held there. The pens have a top capacity of 225 pheasants.

France imported 11,269 American coin-vending machines this year.
