VACATION TIME

We could advise local people who are contemplating vacations to spend their recreational days in the Mid-Columbia area, but we won't. That's like telling the wife what kind of a hat she should buy.

Of course in this region we have our matchless lakes, streams and mountain retreats which could keep the vacationist occupied for many seasons. But we know better than to tell a person how to spend his vacation. It's like advising a man what kind of shaving soap he should buy.

Our climate here is ideal for the camper, the hiker and the fisher, and many do spend their vacation here, but folks can go where they like. We won't advise them. That's like trying to convince a child that vanilla ice cream is better than strawberry.

Folks who make summer sojourns to the ocean beaches or spend most of their time burning up highways and gasoline have learned why they speak of it as spending a vacation. Vacations are not costly in the beautiful Cascades. But we would be superimposing on the public to suggest they spend their vacations here.

LOOKING UP

Business has just turned the pages of its big ledger past the first half of the year, and while more red ink was used on those pages than one cares to see, its somewhat unpleasant aspect is partially overcome by announcements from those in position to know, that an upturn is now about due. They say there will be more black ink used in these next six months, the last half of the year.

Secretary of Commerce Roper is prominent among those to make such a prediction. "Economic skies are definitely clearing," he said recently in a prepared statement to the press.

THE UNEMPLOYED 20-YEAR-OLDS

It is with some concern that we read that the greatest number of placements made by the state reemployment agencies of Oregon during June were men 20 years of age.

Say what you will about modern industry being for young men, we see a picture of youth, eager for employment, no trade learned, no great amount of experience—youth with optimism, with hopes, with enthusiasm for tomorrow—crowding the employment offices.

Let's hope some of the 149 twenty-year-olds who were given employment in the state last month landed in jobs that were not just temporary or seasonal, and that they will be inspired with the high sense of good citizenship which usually develops with a good, steady job.

Napoleon said an army travels on its stomach. But today, looking around us, we can find an army of fellows traveling on their gall.

Termite queens lay 4,000 eggs a day, and may live for ten years. The termite, destroyer of wooden structures, flourished on the earth long before man.

Italians complain over coarse bread made, by government orders, with flour containing 20 per cent corn flower or other substitutes. An official newspaper asserts this bread is better for health and manly vigor. However, Italy's wheat crop is diminished and her self-sufficiency program might be the main cause.
