Western Union Announces Contest

For the first time since 1845, when America's first telegraph company was organized, the public will have the opportunity to design headings for telegraph blanks, it was announced in Hood River this week. To encourage youthful artists and stimulate an interest in the coming world's fairs to be held in New York and San Francisco in 1939, the Western Union Telegraph Co. is offering $350 in cash prizes for headings suitable for the two special world's fairs souvenir telegrams.

Two contests will be held simultaneously, one for the New York heading and one for San Francisco, with the following prizes in each contest; first, $100; second, $50; and third, $25.

Both contests are open to any art student or amateur artist, and no entry fees of any kind are required. Entry blanks setting forth the contest rules are available to anyone except employees of the Telegraph Company, without charge or obligation, at any Western Union office. The contests are now open, and close December 30.

Except for several mechanical requirements there are no restrictions upon contestants other than the limits of the designers imagination, and the winning headings, if they are suitable for use, will join the long list of special headings inaugurated in 1912 when the Telegraph Company first began the practice of using individual decorated heads for special occasions. With the recent interest shown in the new hobby of collecting old telegrams, it is possible that the telegrams printed from the winning drawings will some day find themselves in many telegram collections.

Dentists Once Trained on Apprenticeship Plan

Prior to the inauguration of formal dental education, practitioners received their training by serving as apprentices to dentists already in practice. This method of instruction continued throughout the world until 1840, writes Harry Bear in the Richmond Times-Dispatch. American dentistry has developed through schools for instruction, scientific societies and journals for the dissemination of its literature.

The founding of the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery in 1840, the first dental school in the world, was the beginning of formal dental education. The Baltimore college, the publication of the American Journal of Dental Science in 1839, and the organization of the American Society of Dental Surgeons in 1840 marked the real beginning of the development of American dentistry. In 1840, a student was required to spend only four months in college to receive the degree of doctor of dental surgery.

The entrance requirements and the content of the dental course varied for many years. In 1884 the curriculum had advanced to a two-year course of five months each. When the University College of Medicine was established in Richmond in 1893 the dental course was three years in length. The admission requirements consisted of a "good English education."

Practitioners have for many years observed that affections in one part of the body manifested symptoms elsewhere. During the past century writers have recorded observations of diseases which may have had their origin in other organs of the body—the teeth, for instance.

Earthworms and Lightning Bugs

That earthworms turn into lightning bugs or fireflies is a common myth in some sections of the United States. The belief no doubt arose from the fact that the lightning bug or firefly is a species of beetle which passes through a larva stage. Adults, larvae and eggs are all luminous. Observation of the various species of glowworms may also have contributed to the popular belief. None of these luminous creatures is closely related to the common earthworm.

distinction between its members and the Hindus seems to lie in regard for animals, says Katherine Mayo in "The Face of Mother India." A poor Jain with infested clothes will carefully transfer his tenant from the cloth to better pasturage on his bare flesh, she declares.
