Mother's 'Breath of Life' Saves Unconscious Infant

Sisters Reunited After Fifty Years

Mrs. Rifka Fishpen of Johannesburg, South Africa, is shown (right) being greeted by her sister, Mrs. Rose Frost of Brooklyn, as she arrived in New York. The sisters have not seen each other for 50 years.

Gotta' Match, Buddy?

It's going to be tough, but Bobby can do it. For the past six months this three-year-old Brockton, Mass., lad has been smoking cigars, cigarettes and a pipe. Now his mother, Mrs. Clyde Nordquist, says he's going to replace tobacco with candy. The reason: There's too much publicity.

Where Jews Build A New Homeland

Strongly reminiscent of the pioneers who helped build America are these Jewish settlers in Palestine. A Jewish girl stands guard outside the settlement at Tel Aviv, in the Holy Land. Armed with a shotgun, she takes her turn at sentry duty while the menfolk work. Even the aged must work, remaining constantly alert for raiding Arabs who resent his seeking a homeland.

Ormsby Family Pays Tribute to Connie Mack

U. S. Explorers Seek Headhunters

Mr. and Mrs. Carveth Wells, famed as explorers and authors, as they left by steamer for the Orient, heading an expedition to Formosa to take movies of head hunters for a U. S. geographic society. Accompanying them (center) is Lawrence Mills, Princeton ornithology student.

Earl Mack, coach of the Philadelphia Athletics and son of Connie Mack, venerable manager of that club who is recuperating from an illness, receives a plaque in tribute to the "grand old man" of baseball from the 12 children of Umpire Emmett T. (Red) Ormsby before a game in Shibe park. Mrs. Ormsby, left, superintended the presentation ceremonies.
