WHAT ONE MOTHER DID.

a late issue, calls to mind a friend stalwart temperance principles in a of mine, who was left alone with a large counstituency. family of five boys." Being impressed with the importance of their early acquiring a knowledge of the great physical truths which sooner or later, from sources pure or impure, mus evealed to them, she took occases, as, one by one, their minds sufficiently developed, to convey to them this knowledge. She taught them reverently and tenderly, as befitting this most important and imperative motherly duty. She won the confidence and devotion of their young hearts, and became their trusted councellor in all things. They grew up in an eastern city. Temptation and danger beset their pathway. The saloon, the gaming table and the gilded halls of vice held out their allurements, but in vain. In the wisdom and sympathy and womanliness of their mother and the healthy atmosphere of their home run on full time until further they found shelter and safety from notice, outside perils. To-day they are prominent business men, occupying positions of trust and honor; models of moral and physical integrity. and their mother is to them an object of reverence and tenderness. Such a record of parental duty as this would have saved many a parent from an old age full of sorrow and regret; and many a bright and promising mother's idol from crime, insanity, idiocy and death .-U. BROOMS FOR TEMPERANCE

A correspondent writes from Monmouth, Ill., concerning a new financial plan which the W. C. T. U., of that place, has successfully adopted. This union has made an arrangement with a broom-maker to sell brooms on commission, getting ninety cents on every dozen sold. They put a temperance motto on every broom and sell by orders; the Band of Hope children gladly taking orders on the street in which they live.

It is suggested that if temperance farmers would raise a few rows of broom corn, (the dwarf kind can be raised between rows of berries), and donate it to the cause, temperance women could manage the rest, securing not only a handsome sum for their work, but spreading far and wide, in humble cottage and in princely mansion, the great truths of temperance and sobriety. Since the W. C. T. U. represents so universally the homes of our country, could we have a more fitting emblem than a temperance broom to represent our work?

A cabman in Dublin, Ireland, was recently brought into the police court in that city for having, while under the influence of whisky, driven his cab, containing five women, into the canal. The cold water appears to have revived the driver's senses a little, but his only request to the policeman who came to the rescue of the vehicle was: "Save the horse, never mind the women." This is like the business all through. The manufacturer, the retailer and the drinker become brutalized. Human peril does not touch them. They are sensitive only as to their pockets. And the cry is now ringing through the states from every grog-shop: "Save the business, never mind the women!"

The death of "Petroleum W. Nasby," David Ross Locke, on Febru-

keen satirical power and of convictions on which he never turned his back. The "Nasby Letters" of war times made his fame and probably attracted the largest following and made the greatest amount of public opinion of any writing ever done in the United States. In his later years he turned his pen against the saloon, and through his "A Just Criticism," published in paper, The Toledo Blade, cultivated

A curious case was brought to light recently at Minneapolis. Some time in the fall of 1885 a man named Hall, a contractor, was ar rested on the streets of St. Paul by a detective in search of one Jones, an escaped lunatic. Hall was taken to the probate court, in spite of his protestations, and there indentified by three men as Jones. He was sent to the Rochester insane hospital, where he was given odd jobs of carpentering and kept in confinement till March 4, 1888, when expert examiners pronounced him well and he was discharged. Hall will sue for heavy damages.
