THE TRAINING OF DAUGHTERS.

[Continued from last week.] She is also a religious woman that is, attends particularly to all the outward forms of devotion, is known to be charitable, and in fact, is rather looked up to as a mother these remarks, I could scarcely rethought are not the mothers themselves to blame for this superficial education, this lack of noble purpose, this indifference to the pracday. Is it not their fault alone, life?—Womans' Magazine. that, as Herbert Spencer expresses it, "knowledge which conduces to personal well-being is set aside for that which bring applause." - Dancing, deportment, singing, drawing, the piano-what large space do these occupy? And are not these only learned for the express purpose of shining in society, of eliciting admiration, of making conquests, or in plainer terms, of becoming tempters. I do not desire to underestimate the value of accomplishments, especially music, for its influence in the family is both moral and refining. I would even recommend that every child possessing taste or talent, be afforded as good facilities as possible for cultivation. But it appears to me almost criminal to degrade so noble an art, employing it to such base uses, and I would impress upon all youth that the motive of art culture should be a pure and noble one, for its own intrinsic value, and not for its "extrinsic effect upon others." It is going to extreme to say that persons pursuing art studies should be independent of the world; I believe art may be conscienciously and nobly studied for the ultimate purpose, and hope of gaining a livelihood with it, but even here, there is danger of working for applause, in-But it appears to me almost crimdanger of working for applause, instead of excellence for its own sake. In addition to mere accomplishments, how much time and attention are consumed in beautifying the body, or as a cynical writer has said, "in adorning a casket incapable of holding jewels." How many young girls of fifteen and sixteen their grandmothers would have deemed only suitable for weddings and like festivals. Among certain classes there are very few properly and modestly attired school girls. And on the Sabbath day their dress is often more fitted for the ball room than the sanctuary. And as a general thing is not this also the fault of the mothers? They take pride re dressed every day in robes that of the mothers? They take pride in seeing their daughters "look pretty," and it is perfectly right for young girls to be suitably and becomingly attired, but too often a love for show is imbibed that gradually undermines and absorbs the better qualities of character. An inordinate love of dress in a woman is almost as fatal a passion as love of drink in a man. It is evident that a radical change is necessary to this connection, and mothers ought to see that it is effected. Another fatal defect in the training of young girls and for which the mothers are to blame is the lack of interest in home employments. The tendency of the age seems to be to set up high standards for the culture and education of weman, but we hear little of a high standard of duty and usefulness: The oughly understand woman's work is almost completely ignored. I believe there is in reality less cant about "woman's sphere," and less opposition than is popularly imagined to women who are obliged to earn their own living coming into competition with men. The world accept earnest, competent workers regardless of sex. But the fact should not be lost sight of that there is one great distinctive work for women, that of preserving the harmony, unity and sacredness of home. No matter what their acquirements, if they are lacking in the qualities in Israel. But when she made requisite for this object, their education has been woefully neglected frain from saying, "Oh, foolish and in the most important branches. mistaken mother!" And then I Oh, Christian mothers! is it not a most sacred duty we owe this world, to consecrate ourselves to the work of abolishing "this criminal class by God's law," by entical duties and serious cares of deavoring to train our own daughlife, which are characteristic of ters in the way that not alone leads many young women in the present to eternal life, but also helps to make "next door to heaven" of this
