"DRINK TO PLEASE ME."
The day had been most beautiful; now that the evening had closed in, it seemed more lovely than ever; the moon had risen and all nature was dressed in splendor.

The Grays' cottage was brilliantly lighted and draped for a bridal party. In one parlor sat Ella Gray and Frank Baker, who were soon to take the marriage vow, while the other parlor was filled with invited guests.

At last, the folding doors were thrown open, the minister took his place, and with a few brief words and promises to love and honor, Ella Gray and Frank Baker stood before the company as husband and wife. After the congratulations they all repaired to the dining room where supper was served. As the wine was passed around Frank pushed his glass to one side without tasting it. "Won't you drink your wine, Frank?" "No, I would rather not." "Please do, just this one glass, the rest all drink theirs."

"No, Ella, that was mother's dying request that I should never taste any intoxicating drinks." "And you promised?" "Yes, just as she was dying I made her this promise, and I do not wish to break it now."

"But just one glass can certainly do no harm; take it to please me." The pleading looks of his young bride touched him, and he took the glass, raised it to his lips, then set it down without tasting and turned away. "Why won't you drink it, Frank? One glass can't hurt you so please take this one," and she handed the glass to him again. Without a word he took the glass and would have drank, but just as he was putting the wine to his lips, old Uncle Henry arose from his seat and cried, "Stop!" All eyes were turned toward him.

"Please, Frank, let me tell you my life's story before you take your wine; then see if Ella will urge you to drink. I was once a clerk in an extensive drug store with a large salary, bright prospects, and a heart light and free as the wind that blows; I thought I was and always would be the happiest man alive. But what crushed my spirits, blighted my fairest hopes and dragged me down to what I now am—a poor, miserable, broken down old man. What was it? Shall I tell you? It was a glass of wine handed round at a bridal party, handed to me by the girl I loved, and she was once my wife. 'Drink, Henry, to please me,' was her smiling request, and I drank; I could not resist the pleading look and words, but drank the wine to its dregs, and from that moment I have been a ruined man. And not my life alone, but the life of the girl I married was made miserable by that one glass of wine. 'Drink, Henry, to please me,' is what brought me to this, is what blighted my life for all time to come. 'Drink, Henry, to please me,' is what blighted my wife's brightest hopes, is what broke her heart and dragged her down to an early grave; 'Drink, Henry, to please me,' is what did all this. Now, Ella, will you urge Frank to take this wine? Think of your happiness and his in the time that is to come, and never forget what harm a single glass of wine may do."

By the time Uncle Henry had finished speaking all eyes were wet with tears and Ella was sobbing like a child; but when she could command her voice so to speak she promised that she would never ask Frank to drink another glass of wine, and she ever after kept her word. The wine was taken from the table, and she never set it before her guests again.
