SCHUMANN'S POVERTY. The Straits to Which the Great Compose Was Sometimes Reduced.

A passage or two from the life of Schumann, .the eminent musician. shows the straits to which he was sometimes reduced for want of cash during the time he was a struggling student. In a letter written to his mother in November, 1830, he says: "For the last fortnight I have not had a farthing; I owe Wieck twenty thalers and Lube thirty, and really live like a dog. You say I had better borrow one hundred thalers of somebody, but who is to lend them to me? I hardly know a soul, and those I do know have get as little as I have. I should like to have my hair cut, as it is a yard long, but haven't a copper to do it with. For the last fortnight I have been obliged to wear only white neckties, as my black one is simply in rags, and the white ones will be at an end to-morrow, so I shall have to be old-fashioned and do without. I ought to send several letters to Heidelberg, but have no money for the postage. What will the world think of me? My piano is horribly out of tune, but I can not send for the tuner, etc., etc. I have not even enough money to buy a pistol to shoot myself. That is the state I am in So do not take it amiss If, in a despairing moment, I run right away either to America or to my uncle at Twer, where cholera morbus is just now raging, which might soon put an end to the life and career of my wretched self." Three months later he was in debt at the restaurant for dinners, and the unreasonable proprietor wanted to be paid. Nay, he was most rude in pressing for the money (sixty or seventy thalers). Wieck, also, and a fellow-student were creditors by money lent, and the poor young man had got into a "fix." "By Jove, it's quite true when I tell you that I have only eaten meat about twice and lived upon plain potatoes, and although I am very fond of them, still it is getting too much of a good thing." He had raised money at his "Uncle's." "I have also had to pawn your watch, and one book after the other finds its way to the second-hand bookseller's. You may imagine how much I am losing. The day before yesterday I went in despair to Wieck and borrowed a thaler, and heavens! didn't I pitch into the roast veal, that's all! Poverty must be a horrible thing, because it absolutely excludes one from human society."-

N. Y. Post. Since the establishment of so many treameries and cheese factories throughout the country, cheese making in families has almost become a lost art. The night's and morning's milk may be put together in a large kettle and brought almost to blood heat, when rennet is put in and stirred up with the milk. After that it must not be disturbed again until it has curdled and whey appears on the top and sides of the kettle. Dip this off carefully, so as not to break the curd and cause a whitish whey. This whey may be warmed and turned back to keep up the temperature until the separation of of the whey from the curd is complete, when it is all dipped off again and the hardened, curd is cut from time to time into inch squares with a large knife to still further aid in the separation of the whey. Since the establishment of so-many still further aid in the separation of the whey.

After this the whole is disped into a coarse strainer cloth, spread in the cheese basket and placed over a tub to drain. It is then chopped in a chopping bowl or subbed into small pleess and salted ready for the cheese hoops, when it is gently pressed until the whey is all a pelled. A dried reamet is soaked in salt and water in a stone jar, and the amount required will depend on its strength and must be carned by experience. A tablespoonful to a railon of milk is about the usual quantity. When on the shelf to dry the these must be rubbed daily with grease made from heated butter until it is cured. While a quite small fruit or cider pressinght be used, it would not be well adapted to the purpose, and a cheap one made by a carpenter would be better.

Dresden's Street Car Lines.

A Baltimorean, writing from Dresden to a friend in that city, says: "It was here that I saw the best managed street car lines. The hill boys are men, and the 'jaded' hill horses are 'fiery steeds,' all the company's employes are uniformed, and such uniforms are not on our police; they look more like our military dress. The cars are spotless, double decked, first and second class, roof cheaper; first class fare 15 pfennings, or less than 4 cents from end to end of the route, and 10 pfennings for shorter distances. The horses go like race horses, and are evidently not overworked. There are waiting rooms at numerous crossings along the route, and the morning papers are kept on the racks—two papers to each car."—Chicago Herald. Dresden's Street Car Lines.

Prof. Croll tells us how a striking impression of such a lapse of time may be partially conveyed to the mind:

"Stretch a piece of paper eighty-three feet four inches long around the walls of a room somewhat over twenty feet square, recall the events of life to give some conception of a hundred years, and then consider that a mark one-tenth of an inch broad at one end of the paper represents the century, while the whole strip gives place for only a million years."

This illustration is worth trying.

An even more striking illustration may be seen in the works of nature. Could we stand upon the edge of a gorge a mile and a half in depth, that

A MADMAN AT LARGE!

He is a well-known citizen, and his nearest and dearest friends do not suspect his insanity. How do we happen to know about it? Listen; his appetite is gone, he is low-spirited, he don't sleep well. he has night-sweats, he is annoyed by a hacking cough. These symptoms are the forerunners of consumption and death, and yet he neglects them. Is it any wonder that we call-him a madman? If you are his friend tell him to get a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery without delay, It will cure him if he takes it in time. It will not miracuously create new lungs when the old ones are nearly gon, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy condition. Tell him about it, and warn him that in his case delay means death.
