LINCOLN'S SECRETARY.

A Chat With Colonel Nicolay About the "How did Mr. Lincoln bear himself during the campaign?" "He was always a self-poised man, quiet and equable in temper, seldom greatly elated or much depressed. He was not worried about the campaign, and had himself thoroughly in hand People sent him many curious symbols of frontier life-axes, mauls, wedges, rails-and all sorts of people on al sorts of errands called on him in the Governor's room in the State House, which was assigned to him. Many came from mere miriosity, and they would sit awkwardly around looking at him. He could not talk politics much at such a time, and the bulk of his visitors were shy of speech. handled the symbols that had been sent in, and spoke to him of their use, and he would sometimes take the end of an axe helve between his fingers and hold the axe out at arm's length, to show that he had not lost his strength. In various simple ways he thus managed to kill time. One fellow had the impudence to come wearing a secession cockade in his hat. Lincoln spoke to him pleasantly, and shook hands as with the others, and the intruder sat around half an hour, looking foolish and saying nothing, and finally went out. The crowd quietly ignored the intended insult,"

"Mr. Lincoln was just as democratic in the White House, I believe," I said, "Yes," assented Colonel Nicolay, "and that went far toward giving him his firm hold on the hearts of the people. It was his custom, while he was President, to hold an informal reception between twelve and one o'clock each day, to hear in person the requests and wishes of all sorts of people who chose to come to to see him, Rich and poor, white and black, crowded into the business office, (now Colonel Lamont's) shook hands and told him what they wanted. He generally wrote a card and referred the petitioner to the proper department, out often he attended to it himself. Men who wanted office came; alleged Unionists who wanted pay for losses; cranks who showed him how to put down the rebellion; mothers who had sons in the army; relatives of men who had been ordered shot; tramps who were hard up and wanted money or transportation to enable them to go somewhere. It was like some ancient Druid standing under an oak tree and dealing out justice to the realm."

"Didn't the people exasperate Old Abe sometimes?" "Not often. He listened patiently to all, seldom protecting himself even from bores. I never saw him angry but twice, and then only momentarily He turned one man out of the room and laid his hand on his shoulder to hasten his departure if necessary," I asked if Mr. Lincoln comprehended that he was in constant danger of his

"Of course," said Colonel Nicelay, 'It was often discussed between his friends and himself. They would say: 'Now, Lincoln, you must look out and be constantly on your guard. Some crank is liable to come along and kill you.' His answer always was, 'I will be careful. But I can not discharge my duties and withdraw myself entirely from danger of an assault. I see hundreds of strangers every day, and if any one has the disposition to kill me he will find opportunity. To be absolutely safe, I should cock myself up in a box.' Threatening letters came, and these I always showed to Mr. Lincoln, who generally turned them over to the War Department."-W. A. Croffut, in Indianapolis Journal.

THE LADY OF LYONS.

A New and Verselous Version of an Old-Fashioned Story.

An impression prevails among some people that the Lady of Lyons was a circus woman who went into the lions' cage and performed them. Such was not the case. She was a wealthy young lady of Lyons, N. Y., who moved in the first circles. She was strolling in the garden one day when the gardener's son, who was weeding an onion bed, saw her and immediately fell in love with ber. He thought there never was such a woman as Pauline, though he couldn't make his pa lean that way. nor his ma. Hearing of the young man's infatuation, a couple of Pauline's discarded lovers put up a job on her. They dressed Claude in fine clothes and introduced him to her as a Count. He was of no 'count as a simple gardener. but as a supposed titled man he rose in the social scale very greatly. He pictured to her in glowing colors his home by the Lake of Como, with its fruits of gold, nickel-plated bananas, etc., and she expected to be conveyed to it in a palace car, four sections to themselves. Judge, then, of her vexation and disgust on being conveyed in a bob-tailed horse-car and landed at his mother's humble lodgings on the sixth floor of a cheap tenement building. ARTIFICIAL EYES. An Optician Tells Where They Are Made and What They Are Worth,

One-eyed people who can afford it have two glass eyes, one for day, the other for evening use. The reason for this is that the pupil of the eye is smaller in the day time than at night, and hence the two glass eyes are of lifferent sizes, so as to correspond with the natural eye. The price of glass eyes is becoming cheaper on account of competition, and at the same time they are not good deceptions and do and this roughness irritates the flesh. A glass eye, like false teeth, is taken out at night, for it would not be safe to go to sleep with it in the cavity. It might drop out, and the slightest fall he could get them for about two dollars apiece. But he would have to look over a great many before finding one to fit and to match his other eye in size, polor and expression. Glass eyes are all made abroad, principally in Germany and France, no factory having been started here, although there is a great demand for them in this country. A glass eye is not made after the shape of a natural eye, beforward and leaves but little space. natural form, but the inner side is near cases. flat, with rounded edges. It is slightly ids and the tissues back of the cavity. but the wearer grows accustomed to it, and finds it a rest and a protection A skillful oculist can put a glass into the cavity so that very close observa-tion is necessary to detect it. Not only are the size and color of the natural eye counterfeited, but even the general expression. The oculist has yet to discover means of giving that sympathetic movement which distinguishes a pair of eyes. There is quite a large number of people with glass eyes, say one in four hundred. You would not know it by easual observation, for the wearer of a glass eve is so sensitive on the subject that he is careful of its actions in public, and he becomes so accustomed to the glass orb that he can prevent all but intimate friends from discovering his defect. Life of the King of Oudh Amid the Sur The death of the last King of Oudh deprives Calcutta of a picturesque and almost legendary personage. To the visitor the red and blue roof of his palace, the gardens, stocked with wild beasts and brilliant birds, his innumerable guards and attendants and th tens of thousands of pigeons that were always wheeling above the ground seemed to embody the fantastic life of native India. The men guarding the doors were all his own sepoys from Cawnpore, and once you had an order to penetrate the charmed circle you passed through a beautiful succession of groves and pasterres and miniature grassplots and pleasant terraces. His menagerie fell away of late, but some years back it almost rivaled the famous collection in the London Zoo. In one large space there were buffaloes, goats and deer and ostriches and other great birds. A tank something like one hundred and fifty yards square was covered with storks and pelicans and swans, and had ample well-wooded rambling grounds around it. The smaller birds were sheltered in lofty aviaries. The lions and tigers and wolves and other ferocious animals were, of course, caged, but caged very comfortably. In another garden a building that looked like a magnificent ant hill was fixed in the center of a large square well, and was carefully surrounded with water. Here the snakes were segregated, and five hundred of them lived in the narrow holes with which the strange building was artificially honeycombed. It used to be one of the great sights of the day to see them fed with frogs. But his pigeous formed the great feature of the King's collection.

"One who knew him" writes that he led a kingly life to the end, though he had not more than seven thousand subjects to govern: "He held court and received regal honors, created titled nobles according to his caprice and traveled over his grounds in a campan, occupying at different times different country seats, like other Kings." At one time he would watch his animals and his fishes being fed, at another his brought up to fight before him. He had, we are told, a prevailing passion for order and cleanliness. He prayed five times a day, though he ate only one meal, but from morning till night he chewed pan sopari and smoked the hookah. - Times of India.

The antimely death which annually carries off thousands of human beings in the prime of youth, is indeed terribe. The first approach of consumption is insidious, and the sufferer himself is the most unconscious of its approach. One of the most alarming symptoms of this dread disease is, in fact, the ineradicable hope, which lurks in the heart of the victim, preventing him from taking timely steps to arrest the malady. That it can be arrested in its earlier stages is beyond question as there are hundreds of well-authenticated cases where Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a complete cure.
