Cases in Which Medical Aid Is of Most Value in the Early Stages.

In the earliest stages of consumption of the lungs, it is possible to arrest the progress of the affection and secure a return to heaith by change of climate und of habi s of life, together with wisely directed diet, exercise and hygiene generally. But this stage is often permitted to pass without any serious attention being given to it by the patient or his friends. One reason of this is the unreasonable hopefulness that is a mental characteristic of most consumptives. Besides the insignificant cough and slight symptoms of deteriorating health, which are often only to be noticed and given their true value by the experienced physician, do not carry with them any such degree of alarm as they merit. When a profuse hemorrhage occurs the feeling of security may give way to the alarm that has been felt before. Any persistent cough should be attended to before it is too late to do good. As in all diseases depending upon a special cause or micro-organism, consumption is not to be cured by drugs alone. It is possible that, as the late Prof. Flint taught, it may be a disease that has a tendency to recover of itself, but if it is "self-limited," it can only be so under the best possible sanitary and hygienic condi-

An ordinary malarial fever is not, as a rule, dangerous to life. But any case of ague may develop into a pernicious (congestive) intermittent or remittent fever at any time. This it is that renders prompt arrest of the common ague of such great importance. For this reason also treatment by nostrums and domestic remedies too often results in an attack which no form of medication will be competent to cure. The pernicious attacks are almost invariably preceded by ordinary chills, so that when the "congestive" paroxysm does come on no one can say that there was any excuse for calling the doctor too late. Even if pernicious attacks are not developed, the subject of long-continued agne becomes broken in health. is pale, sallow and full of pains of a neuralgie character that makes lifmiserable; and the longer the disease persists without interruption, the more difficult it is to stop its progress and to cure the results of chronic malaria poisoning.

A large proportion of cases of valvular diseases of the heart originate in acute rheumatism. This disease attacks the joints and such organs as most resemble them in structure. The heart from its continual movement and the white fibrous materials from which it is lined and covered bears very strong resemblance to a large joint. In rheumatic fever (inflammatory rheumatism) the main danger arises from the tendency the inflammation shows to attack the covering of the heart or the valves to be found be tween the cavities and at the entrance of the great artery that takes the blood to distribute it all over the body. Experience has demonstrated that the best method to prevent the disease from attacking the heart is to give large quantities of alkalies-the bicarbonates of sodium and of potassium being the best-until the acid material, which appears to be at the basis of rheumatism, is fully neutralized. This is shown by the secretion of the kidneys becoming alkaline in reaction. As lonas this is not done and kept up per sistently there is danger of trouble setting in at any moment. The younger the patient the greater the danger of these complications. Henc the necessity, in every rheumatic case of prompt and rational treatment.

In nervous, sensitive children, slight causes are sufficient to bring on an attack of convulsions. Thus, some hard indigestible material swallowed, or the presence of worms in the digestive tube, is often enough responsible for these always alarming symptoms. If the cause can be removed, of course this should be done, and the sooner the better. One very cogent reason for the last remark is the fact that after convulsions have occurred a number of times a morbid habit becomes established in the nervous system, which is strong enough by itself to produce a return of the spasms, even after the original exciting cause has been thoroughly removed. When the "fits" rereturn from time to time without apparent reason, we say that the patient has epilepsy, one of the most intractable of diseases. It is in cases of this description, where the cause of the convulsions can be removed, that the physician should not be called too late. If consulted sufficiently early a lifetime of misery, ending in insanity, perhaps, might be changed into one of useful-

There are many surgical affections which exemplify the warning this artiele is intended to convey. Of these eancer and sarcomas afford the best examples. When small, and before they have infiltrated the surrounding tissues or sent colonies into distant organs, if removed by the surgeon's knife they may or may not return. The chances vary a good deal, according to the variety of malignant growth which is under observation and its locality. But removed, and that at as early a date as possible after discovery, offers the best chance for life and freedom from suffering .- St. Louis Globe-Demoocrat.

THE COLONEL'S TRIAL.

One of the most annoying faults of the hired "colored lady" is her persistent disposition to talk about the affairs of her own family. Sometimes, despite every attempt at discouragement, she will begin a story, of which her brother is the hero, and keep it up until patience is gray-haired with age. Ma rinda Napoleon, a likely colored woman, applied to Colonel Wetheral for a position of trust in his family. She began to tell him of her honesty.

"That makes no difference," said the Colonel. "I don't care whether you well applied. - Interior. are honest or not, and you may be reasonably negligent in the discharge of your duties, but there is one thing I wish to impress upon your mind." "What's dat, Colonel? 'case I can do

STORMS AND RAILS.

How Rain Appears to Follow the Laying A singular theory has been promugated in Mexico concerning an alleger relation between the steel rails of railways and the prevalence of storms. The northern section of the Mexican Central road has been seriously damaged by washouts, and people who observed the phenomena express the opinion that the waterspouts which burs on the track were attracted by the rails and the telegraph wire. An electric current, they say, runs along the track, which makes a convenient avenue for storms. This would appear to be a somewhat fanciful conjecture, but the engineers engaged in building the Guadalajara branch of the Mexican Central railroad offer testimony which gives it at least an air of plausibility. They state that as fast as the construction advances rain follows, and they believe it is due to the large quantity of steel rail on flat ears which are carried forward as fast as the work permits. The country, according to their report, is dry in advance of the construction trains, and also behind them far many miles, but in a circle of a few miles in diameter. having its center at the point where the steel rails are, the rain comes down in orrents. It appears that enough importance is attached to these theories to induce scientific men to make them a subject of study. We do not, however, anticipate any immediate practical results of great value. With all the skill and knowledge which the Government can bring to bear, it has not yet succeeded even in predicting storms with such certainty as would be desirable, and when it comes to producing or preventing them, we shall probably have to wait some time before the matter assumes the character of an exact science. - Safety Valve.

Instantaneous Photography.

Instantaneous photography is no nger a question to be determined by study and experiment, but has assumed the place of an accomplished and familiar fact. One of most interesting achievements in this direction, as described in a London paper, or ginated in the question as to whether he upper part of the wheel of a vehiole when in motion travels faster than the lower part. In determining this matter by instantaneous photography, the ertist took the photograph of an omnibus en route, and in this photograph, while the lower ends of the spokes unna-diately adjacent to the ground are not perceptibly unshapened by the motion, the tops of the upper spokes show an angular motion corresponding to about ten degrees. The photograph in this case most suc cessfully expresses the lact that the wheel it represers is in rapid motion.

A ROYAL SAVAGE The Residence of King George, the Rules of the Tongan Islands.

We called at Tongatuba, the principal island of the Friendly, or Tongan, group, and, learning that the King was then in residence, determined to pay our respects to the celebrated old man, of whom we had heard so many and such strange stories. His house, we found, was a very nice-looking twostoried wooden building, close to the sea, and stood in a good-sized compound, fenced in on all sides. Passing through a handsome pair of cast-iron gates we arrived at the mansion itself, the veranda of which appeared to be used as a coach house, for there was proudly and snugly stored away the royal buggy; rather an anomalous sight for a palace and a strange position for an equipage of state.

There were no signs of life about the place, and failing to wake any one by repeated knocks at the front door, we decided to circumnavigate the establishment, and did so, finding it chill and lifeless everywhere till we came to a row of cool houses and upon a curiou sight. There, in the veranda of one of them, squatted an ancient and dusky person, with only a scant cloth fastened about his waist, and bending his head obediently before an old woman who was literally plastering it with lime. As soon as the curious pair became aware of our presence the process in operation was arrested, and, perceiving this, we were about to address them to explain our presence and ask a few questions, when the gentleman of the limy head roared out something in a truly terrible voice, and at the same time a fine young Tongan, very oily and three-quarters nude, came rushing out from the interior toward us. With much politeness and evident agitation he conducted us away from the veranda and back to the big house, where in broken English, backed up by much gesticulation, he revealed to us the appolling fact that we had trespassed upon the privacy of no less a person than his majesty the King. Having humbly apologized for our innocent intrusion and received a reassuring answer, we were ushered through the window into a sort of drawing-room, a well-furnished apartment, with a number of red velvet chairs set around a long mahogany table-one chair a little higher than the rest, acting, no doubt, as a throne. Here we waited for about half an hour, when his majesty entered, accompanied by an interpreter, and was graciously pleased to accord us a formal interview. He shook hands very pleasantly with our party, and we all sat down on the red velvet chairs, the interpreter squatting on the floor be-city druggist's to ask what effect Joy's Vegetable Sarssparilla, about which she had heard so much recently, would have in cases of dyspepsia and sick headache. She was assured that in most case it would relieve both. She was, however, so incredulous that finally the druggist gave her a bottle, not to be paid for unless it effected a cure. A proposition so startlingly practical has seldom, if ever before, been made. The following just received is the convincing conclusion, and tells its own story:

San Francisco, February 8, 1888,

Dear Sir: I write to admit that, notwithstanding my misgivings, Joy's Vegetable Sarssparilla did all that you promised. I had tried so many prescriptions, to no purpose, that I had come to believe nothing would relieve my dyspepsia and sick headaches, but I have not had a return of either since I commenced taking it. I believe I am permanently cured, but will, out of an abundance of caution, continue to take its regularly for a while yet. Snakes Will Not Live on Soil From the Emerald Isle. James Francis Hogan, in his book, 'The Irish in Australia," relates that Vaucluse, one of the prettiest spots on Sydney Harbor, has a curious and romantic history. At the beginning of the century it was chosen as his place of residence by Sir Henry Hays, an Irish Baronet, who had the misfortune to be transported for abducting the lady on whom he had set his affections, but who did not see her way to reciprocate his tender passion. Though technically a prisoner, Sir Henry's rank and social position caused him to be treated by the authorities as a privileged person, and he was allowed a full measure of freedom on giving his word of honor that he would make no attempt to leave the colony and return to Ireland. Sir Henry accepted his fate with philosophical resignation, and commenced to build a new home for himself on the beautiful estate which he had purchased and called Vaucluse. But though the place was, and still is, one of the loveliest spots on earth, it had at that time one serious and annoying drawback. It was infested with snakes.

One day, however, a bright idea struck Sir Henry as he was cogitating on the subject, and wondering if there were any practical means of ridding himself of these unwelcome intruders. He resolved to try a bold and remarkable experiment. He would see whether the virtue of St. Patrick's prohibition of snakes on Irish soil would extend to the same soil if transferred to the other side of the world. He accordingly sent home for a number of barrels of Irish soil, and they arrived in Sydney in due course. Sir Henry Brooders, Houses, How to raise Chickens, etc. extend to the same soil if transferred then spread this imported earth, as far as it would go, around his residence, with the result, very gratifying to himself, that his domestic precincts were never afterwards troubled by snakes, although the other portions of the estate continued to be infested by the reptiles. Succeeding occupants of Vaucluse, among them the distinguished statesman, W. C. Wentworth, all agree in testifying to the singular fact that a snake was never known to cross the charmed circle of Irish earth.

I cannot praise the ny skin as clear and free from scales as a baby's All I used of them was three boxes of Cuncus here and said you would have cured me for $200.00 you would have had the money. I looked like the picture in your book of Psoriasis (picture number two, "How to Cure Skin Diseases"), but now I an as clear as any person ever was. Through force of habit I rub my hands over my arms and less Sold everywhere. Pri.e: Cuticura, 50c.; Soar, scratch once in a while, but to no purpose im all well. I scratched twenty-tight years, and to be a kind of second nature to me. I then you a thousand times. Any one who reads the nay write to me and I will answer it.
